

THE INSTITUTIO ORATORIA OF
QUINTILIAN

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

H. E. BUTLER, M.A.,

PROFESSOR OF LATIN IN LONDON UNIVERSITY

IN FOUR VOLUMES

II

LONDON : WILLIAM HEINEMANN
NEW YORK : G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

MCMXXI

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
BOOK IV	1
Preface.—Ch. 1: The prooemium or exordium .— Ch. 2: The narratio or statement of facts.—Ch. 3: Digressions.—Ch. 4: Propositions preparatory to proof.—Ch. 5: Partition.
BOOK V	153
Preface.—Ch. 1: Proofs, artificial and unartificial. —Ch. 2: Previous decisions.—Ch. 3: Public report or opinion.—Ch. 4: Evidence extracted by torture. —Ch. 5: Refutation of documentary evidence.— Ch. 6: Reasons for and against offering to take an oath.—Ch. 7: Documentary evidence; oral evidence; production of witnesses; attitude to be adopted toward witnesses; examination; conflict between documentary and oral evidence; super- natural evidence.—Ch. 8: Artificial proofs.—Ch. 9: Signs, indications, circumstantial evidence, their difference from proofs; appearances; prognostics. —Ch. 10: Arguments.—Ch. 11: Examples and instances.—Ch. 12: Arguments again.—Ch. 13: Refutation and proof.—Ch. 14: The enthymeme, epicheireme, and syllogism.
BOOK VI	371
Preface; the death of Quintilian's son.—Ch. 1: Peroration.—Ch. 2: Necessity of studying the temper of the judges; pathos, ethos, and emotional appeal.—Ch. 3: Laughter, wit, and humour.— Ch. 4: Altercatio or debate.—Ch. 5: Judgment and sagacity.
NOTES	523
INDEX	527

THE INSTITUTIO ORATORIA OF QUINTILIAN

BOOK IV

PREFACE

I HAVE now, my dear Marcellus Victorius, completed the third book of the work which I have dedicated to you, and have nearly finished a quarter of my task, and am confronted with a motive for renewed diligence and increased anxiety as to the judgment it may be found to deserve. For up to this point we were merely discussing rhetoric between ourselves and, in the event of our system being regarded as inadequate by the world at large, were prepared to content ourselves with putting it into practice at home and to confine ourselves to the education of your son and mine. But now Domitianus Augustus has entrusted me with the education of his sister's grandsons, and I should be undeserving of the honour conferred upon me by such divine appreciation, if I were not to regard this distinction as the standard by which the greatness of my undertaking must be judged. For it is clearly my duty to spare no pains in moulding the character of my august pupils, that they may earn the deserved approval of the most righteous of censors. The same applies to their intellectual training, for I would not be found to have disappointed the expectations of a prince pre-eminent in eloquence as in all other virtues. But no one is surprised at the frequency with which the greatest poets invoke the Muses not merely at the commencement of their works, but even further on when they have reached some important passage and repeat their vows and utter fresh prayers for assistance. Assuredly therefore I may ask indulgence for doing what I omitted to do when I first entered on this task and calling to my aid all the gods and Himself before them all (for his power is unsurpassed and there is no deity that looks with such favour upon learning), beseeching him to inspire me with genius in proportion to the hopes that he has raised in me, to lend me propitious and ready aid and make me even such as he has believed me to be. And this, though the greatest, is not the only motive for this act of religious devotion, but my work is of such a nature that, as it proceeds, I am confronted with greater and more arduous obstacles than have yet faced me. For my next task is to explain the order to be followed in forensic causes, which present the utmost complication and variety. I must set forth the function of the exordium, the method of the statement of facts, the cogency of proofs, whether we are confirming our own assertions or refuting those of our opponents, and the force of the peroration, whether we have to refresh the memory of the judge by a brief recapitulation of the facts, or to do what is far more effective, stir his emotions. Some have preferred to give each of these points separate treatment, fearing that if they undertook them as a whole the burden would be greater than they could bear, and consequently have published several books on each individual point. I have ventured to treat them altogether and foresee such infinite labour that I feel weary at the very thought of the task I have undertaken. But I have set my hand to the plough and must not look back. My strength may fail me, but my courage must not fail.

BOOK IV. PR. 3-7

BOOK IV. PR. 7-1. 4

I. The commencement or exordium as we call it in Latin is styled a proem by the Greeks. This seems to me a more appropriate name, because whereas we merely indicate that we are beginning our task, they clearly show that this portion is designed as an introduction to the subject on which the orator has to speak. It may be because οἶμῃ means a tune, and 2 players on the lyre have given the name of proem to the prelude which they perform to win the favour of the audience before entering upon the regular contest for the prize, that orators before beginning to plead make a few introductory remarks to win the indulgence of the judges. Or it may be because οἶμος 3 in Greek means a way, that the practice has arisen of calling an introduction a proem. But in any case there can be no doubt that by proem we mean the portion of a speech addressed to the judge before he has begun to consider the actual case. And it is a mistaken practice which we adopt in the schools of always assuming in our exordia that the judge is already acquainted with the case. This form of 4 licence arises from the fact that a sketch of the case is always given before actual declamation.¹ Such kinds of exordia may, however, be employed in the

¹ i.e. the statement of the "hard case" with which the declaimer has to deal. cp. iv. ii. 98.

BOOK IV. 1. 4-7

courts, when a case comes on for the second time, but never or rarely on the first occasion, unless we are speaking before a judge who has knowledge of the case from some other source.

The sole purpose of the exordium is to prepare our audience in such a way that they will be disposed to lend a ready ear to the rest of our speech. The majority of authors agree that this is best effected in three ways, by making the audience well-disposed, attentive and ready to receive instruction. I need hardly say that these aims have to be kept in view throughout the whole speech, but they are especially necessary at the commencement, when we gain admission to the mind of the judge in order to penetrate still further.

As regards good-will, we secure that either from persons connected with the case or from the case itself. Most writers have divided these persons into three classes, the plaintiff, the defendant and the judge. This classification is wrong, for the exordium may sometimes derive its conciliatory force from the person of the pleader. For although he may be modest and say little about himself, yet if he is believed to be a good man, this consideration will exercise the strongest influence at every point of the case. For thus he will have the good fortune to give the impression not so much that he is a zealous advocate as that he is an absolutely reliable witness. It is therefore pre-eminently desirable that he should be believed to have undertaken the case out of a sense of duty to a friend or relative, or even better, if the point can be made, by a sense of patriotism or at any rate some serious moral consideration. No doubt it is even more necessary for the parties themselves to create the impression that they have been forced to take legal action by some weighty and honourable reason or even by necessity. But just as the authority of the speaker 8 carries greatest weight, if his undertaking of the case is free from all suspicion of meanness, personal spite or ambition, so also we shall derive some silent support from representing that we are weak, unprepared, and no match for the powerful talents arrayed against us, a frequent trick in the exordia of Messala. For 9 men have a natural prejudice in favour of those who are struggling against difficulties, and a scrupulous judge is always specially ready to listen to an advocate whom he does not suspect to have designs on his integrity. Hence arose the tendency of ancient orators to pretend to conceal their eloquence, a practice exceedingly unlike the ostentation of our own times. It is also important to avoid giving the 10 impression that we are abusive, malignant, proud or slanderous toward any individual or body of men, especially such as cannot be hurt without exciting the disapproval of the judges. As to the 11 judge, it would be folly for me to warn speakers not to say or even hint anything against him, but for the fact that such things do occur. Our opponent's advocate will sometimes provide us with material for our exordium: we may speak of him in honorific terms, pretending to fear his eloquence and influence with a view to rendering them suspect to the judge, or occasionally, though very seldom, we may abuse him, as Asinius did in his speech on behalf of the heirs of Urbinia, where he includes among the proofs of the weakness of the plaintiff's case the fact that he has secured Labienus as his advocate.

BOOK IV. I. 7-11

BOOK IV. I. 12-16

Cornelius Celsus denies that such remarks can be 12 considered as belonging to the exordium on the ground that they are irrelevant to the actual case. Personally I prefer to follow the authority of the greatest orators, and hold that whatever concerns the pleader is relevant to the case, since it is natural that the judges should give readier credence to those to whom they find it a pleasure to listen. The character 13 of our client himself may, too, be treated in various ways: we may emphasise his worth or we may commend his weakness to the protection of the court. Sometimes it is desirable to set forth his merits, when the speaker will be less hampered by modesty than if he were praising his own. Sex, age, and situation are also important considerations, as for instance when women, old men or wards are pleading in the character of wives, parents or children. For pity alone may move even a strict judge. 14 These points, however, should only be lightly touched upon in the exordium, not run to death. As regards our opponent he is generally attacked on similar lines, but with the method reversed. For power is generally attended by envy, abject meanness by contempt, guilt and baseness by hatred, three emotions which are powerful factors to alienate the good-will of the judges. But a simple statement will 15 not suffice, for even the uneducated are capable of that: most of the points will require exaggeration or extenuation as expediency may demand: the method of treatment belongs to the orator, the points themselves belong to the case.

We shall win the good-will of the judge not 16 merely by praising him, which must be done with tact and is an artifice common to both parties, but

BOOK IV. 1. 16-19

by linking his praise to the furtherance of our own case. For instance, in pleading for a man of good birth we shall appeal to his own high rank, in speaking for the lowly we shall lay stress on his sense of justice, on his pity in pleading the cause of misfortune, and on his severity when we champion the victims of wrong, and so on. I should also wish, if possible, 17 to be acquainted with the character of the judge. For it will be desirable to enlist their temperaments in the service of our cause, where they are such as are like to be useful, or to mollify them, if they are like to prove adverse, just according as they are harsh, gentle, cheerful, grave, stern, or easy-going. It will, however, sometimes happen that the judge 18 is hostile to us and friendly to our adversaries. Such cases demand the attention of both parties and I am not sure that the party favoured by the judge does not require to handle the situation with even more care than his opponent. For perverse judges have sometimes a preposterous tendency to give judgment against their friends or in favour of those with whom they have a quarrel, and of committing injustice merely to avoid the appearance of partiality. 19 Again some have been judges in cases where their own interests were involved. I note, for instance, in the books of observations published by Septimius that Cicero appeared in such a case, while I myself, when I appeared on behalf of Queen Berenice, actually pleaded before her. In such cases we must be guided by the same principles that I have laid down above. The opponent of the judge will emphasise his confidence in the justice of his client's cause, while the advocate of his interests will express the fear that the judge may be influenced by a quixotic delicacy. Further, if the judge is 20 thought to have come into court with a prejudice in favour of one side, we must try to remove or strengthen that prejudice as circumstances may demand. Again occasionally we shall have to calm the judges' fears, as Cicero does in the pro Milone, where he strives to persuade them not to think that Pompey's soldiers have been stationed in the court

 as a threat to themselves. Or it may be necessary to frighten them, as Cicero does in the Verrines.¹
 There are two ways of bringing fear to bear upon 21
 the judges. The commonest and most popular is to threaten them with the displeasure of the Roman people or the transference of the juries to another class²; the second is somewhat brutal and is rarely employed, and consists in threatening them with a prosecution for bribery: this is a method which is fairly safe with a large body of judges, since it checks the bad and pleases the good members of the jury, but I should never recommend its employment with a single judge³ except in the very last resort. But if necessity should drive us to such a 22 course, we must remember that such threats do not come under the art of oratory, any more than appeals from the judgment of the court (though that is often useful), or the indictment of the judge before he gives his decision. For even one who is no orator can threaten or lay an information.

If the case affords us the means of winning the 23 favour of the judge, it is important that the points which seem most likely to serve to our purpose should be selected for introduction into the exordium.

³ It must be borne in mind that iudex may be a juryman forming one of a large panel, or a single judge trying a civil action.

BOOK IV. I. 23-26

On this subject Verginius falls into error, for he asserts that Theodorus lays down that some one reflexion on each individual question that is involved by the case should be introduced into the exordium. As a matter of fact Theodorus does not say this, 24 but merely that the judge should be prepared for the most important of the questions that are to be raised. There is nothing to object to in this rule, save that he would make it of universal application, whereas it is not possible with every question nor desirable in every case. For instance, seeing that the plaintiff's advocate speaks first, and that till he has spoken the judge is ignorant of the nature of the dispute, how is it possible for us to introduce reflexions relating to all the questions involved? The facts of the case must be stated before that can be done. We may grant that some questions may be mentioned, for that will sometimes be absolutely necessary; but can we introduce all the most important questions, or in other words the whole case? If we do we shall have completed our statement of facts within the limits of the exordium. Again if, as often happens, the case is somewhat 25 difficult, surely we should seek to win the good-will of the judge by other portions of our speech sooner than thrust the main questions upon him in all their naked harshness before we have done anything to secure his favour. If the main questions ought always to be treated at the beginning of a speech, we might dispense with the exordium. We shall 26 then occasionally introduce certain points from the main questions into the exordium, which will exercise a valuable influence in winning the judge to regard us with favour. It is not necessary to enumerate the points which are likely to gain us such favour, because they will be obvious as soon as we have acquainted ourselves with the circumstances of each dispute, while in view of the infinite variety presented by cases it is out of the question to specify them here. Just, however, as it is in the interest 27 of our case to note and amplify these points, so it is also to rebut or at any rate lessen the force of anything that is damaging to our case. Again our case may justify an appeal to compassion with regard to what we have suffered in the past or are likely to suffer. For I do not share the opinion 28 held by some, that the exordium and the peroration are to be distinguished by the fact that the latter deals with the past, the former with the future. Rather I hold that the difference between them is this: "in our opening any preliminary appeal to the compassion of the judge must be made sparingly and with restraint, while in the peroration we may give full rein to our emotions, place fictitious speeches in the mouths of our characters, call the dead to life, and produce the wife or children of the accused in court, practices which are less usual in exordia." But it is the function of the exordium not 29 merely to excite the feelings to which I have alluded, but to do all that is possible to show that our opponent's case is not deserving of them. It is advantageous to create the impression not merely that our fate will be deserving of pity, if we lose, but that our adversary will be swollen with outrageous insolence if he prove successful.

But exordia are often drawn from matters which 30 do not, strictly speaking, concern either cases or the persons involved, though not unrelated to either.

BOOK IV. I. 30-33

In such relation to persons stand not only wives and children of whom I have just spoken, but also relations, friends, and at times districts and states together with anything else that is like to suffer injury from the fall of the client whom we defend. As regards external circumstances¹ which have a 31 bearing on the case, I may mention time, which is introduced in the exordium of the pro Caelio, place (in the pro Deiotaro), the appearance of the court (in the pro Milone), public opinion (in the Verrines), and finally, as I cannot mention all, the ill-repute of the law courts and the popular expectation excited by the case. None of these actually belong to the case, but all have some bearing on it. Theophrastus adds that the exordium 32 may be drawn from the speech of one's opponent, as that of the pro Ctesiphonte of Demosthenes appears to be, where he asks that he may be allowed to speak as he pleases and not to be restricted to the form laid down by the accuser in his speech.

Confidence often labours under the disadvantage 33 of being regarded as arrogance. But there are certain tricks for acquiring good-will, which though almost universal, are by no means to be neglected, if only to prevent their being first employed against ourselves. I refer to rhetorical expressions of wishing, detestation, entreaty, or anxiety. For it keeps the judge's attention on the alert, if he is led to think the case novel, important, scandalous, or likely to set a precedent, still more if he is excited by concern for himself or the common weal, when it is generally believed that the corruption of the courts is such that it is practically impossible to secure the condemnation of a wealthy man.

BOOK IV. i. 33-37

his mind must be stirred by hope, fear, admonition, entreaty and even by falsehood, if it seems to us that it is likely to advance our case. We shall also find it a useful device for wakening the attention of our audience to create the impression that we shall not keep them long and intend to stick closely to the point. The mere fact of such attention undoubtedly makes the judge ready to receive instruction from us, but we shall contribute still more to this effect if we give a brief and lucid summary of the case which he has to try; in so doing we shall be following the method adopted by Homer and Virgil at the beginning of their poems. For as regards the length of the exordium, it should propound rather than expound, and should not describe how each thing occurred, but simply indicate the points on which the orator proposes to speak. I do not think a better example of this can be found than the exordium to the pro Cluentio of Cicero. "I have noted, judges, that the speech for the prosecution was divided into two parts: of these, the first seemed to rest and in the main to rely on the odium, now inveterate, arising from the trial before Junius, while the other appeared to touch, merely as a matter of form, and with a certain timidity and diffidence, on the question of the charge of poisoning, though it is to try this point that the present court has been constituted in accordance with the law." All this, however, is easier for the defender than the prosecutor, since the latter has merely to remind the judge, while the former has to instruct him. Nor shall any authority, however great, induce me to abandon my opinion that it is always desirable to render the judge attentive and ready to receive instruction. I am well aware that those who disagree with me urge that it is to the advantage of a bad case that its nature should not be understood; but such lack of understanding arises not from inattention on the part of the judge, but from his being deceived. Our opponent has spoken and perhaps convinced him; we must alter his opinion, and this we cannot do unless we render him attentive to what we have to say and ready to be instructed. What are we to do then? I agree to the view that we should cut down, depreciate and deride some of our opponent's arguments with a view to lessening the attention shown him by the judge, as Cicero did in the pro Ligario. For what was the purpose of Cicero's irony save that Caesar should be induced to regard the case as presenting only old familiar features and consequently to give it less attention? What was his purpose in the *pro Caelio*¹ save to make the case seem far more trivial than had been anticipated?

It is, however, obvious that of the rules which I have laid down, some will be applicable to one case and some to another. The majority of writers consider that there are five kinds of causes, the honourable, the mean, the doubtful or ambiguous, the extraordinary and the obscure, or as they are called in Greek, ἐνδοξον, ἄδοξον, ἀμφίδοξον, παράδοξον and δυσπαρακολούθητον. To these some would add a sixth, the scandalous, which some again include under the heading of the mean, others under the extraordinary. The latter name is given to cases which are contrary to ordinary expectation. In ambiguous cases it is specially important to secure the good-will of the judge, in the obscure to render him ready to receive instruction, in the mean to excite his attention. As regards the honourable the very nature of the case is sufficient to win the approval of the judge; in the scandalous and extraordinary some kind of palliation is required.

BOOK IV. 1. 41-44

Some therefore divide the exordium into two parts, 42 the introduction and the insinuation, making the former contain a direct appeal to the good-will and attention of the judge. But as this is impossible in scandalous cases, they would have the orator on such occasions insinuate himself little by little into the minds of his judges, especially when the features of the case which meet the eye are discreditable, or because the subject is disgraceful or such as to meet with popular disapproval, or again if the outward circumstances of the case are such as to handicap it or excite odium (as for instance when a patron appears against a client or a father against a son), or pity (as when our opponent is an old or blind man or a child). To save the situa- 43 tion the rhetoricians lay down a number of rules at quite inordinate length: they invent fictitious cases and treat them realistically on the lines which would be followed in actual pleading. But these peculiar circumstances arise from such a variety of causes as to render classification by species impossible, and their enumeration save under the most general heads would be interminable. The line to be adopted will 44 therefore depend on the individual nature of each case. As a general principle, however, I should advise the avoidance of points which tell against us and concentrate on those which are likely to be of service. If the case itself is weak, we may derive help from the character of our client; if his character is doubtful, we may find salvation in the nature of the case. If both are hopeless, we must look out for something that will damage our opponent. For though it is desirable to secure as much positive good-will as possible, the next best thing is to incur the minimum of actual dislike. Where we cannot 45 deny the truth of facts that are urged against us, we must try to show that their significance has been exaggerated or that the purpose of the act was not what is alleged or that the facts are irrelevant or that what was done may be atoned for by penitence or has already been sufficiently punished. It is consequently easier for an advocate to put forward such pleas than for his client, since the former can praise without laying himself open to the charge of arrogance and may sometimes even reprove him with advantage to the case. At times, like Cicero in his 46 defence of Rabirius Postumus,¹ he will pretend that he himself is strongly moved, in order to win the ear of the judge and to give the impression of one who is absolutely convinced of the truth of his cause, that so his statements may find all the readier credence whether he defends or denies the actions attributed to his client. Consequently it is of the first importance, wherever the alternative is open to us, to consider whether we are to adopt the character of a party to the suit or of an advocate. In the schools, of course, we have a free choice in the matter, but it is only on rare occasions that a man is capable of pleading his own case in the actual courts. When 47 we are going to deliver a declamation on a theme that turns largely on its emotional features, we must give it a dramatic character suited to the persons concerned. For emotions are not transferable at will, nor can we give the same forcible expression to another man's emotions that we should give to our own. The circumstances which call for insinuation arise also in cases where the pleading of our opponent has made a powerful impression on the minds of the judges, or where the audience whom we have to address are tired. The first difficulty we shall evade by promising to produce our own proofs and by eluding the arguments of our opponents, the second by holding out hopes that we shall be brief and by the methods already mentioned for capturing the attention of the judges. Again an opportune display of wit will often restore their flagging spirits and we may alleviate their boredom by the introduction of entertaining matter derived from any source that may be available. It will also be found advantageous to anticipate the objections that may be raised by our opponent, as Cicero¹ does when he says "I know that some persons are surprised that one, who for such a number of years has defended so many and attacked none, should have come forward as the accuser of Verres," he then goes on to show that the accusation which he has undertaken is really a defence of the allies, an artifice known as πρόληψις or anticipation. Although this is at times a useful device, some of our declaimers employ it on practically every occasion, on the assumption that one should always start with the order thus reversed.

BOOK IV. 1. 44-47

The adherents of Apollodorus reject the view stated above to the effect that there are only three respects in which the mind of the judge requires to be prepared, and enumerate many others, relating to the character of the judge, to opinions regarding matters which though outside the case have still some bearing on it, to the opinion current as to the case itself, and so on ad infinitum : to these they add others relating to the elements of which every dispute is composed, such as persons, deeds, words, motives, time and place, occasions and the like. Such views are, I admit, perfectly correct, but are 51 covered by one or other of the three classes which I have mentioned. For if I can secure good-will, attention and readiness to learn on the part of my judge, I cannot see what else I ought to require; even fear, which perhaps may be thought more than anything else to lie outside the considerations I have mentioned, secures the attention of the judge and deters him from favouring our opponent.

BOOK IV. 1. 50-53

It is not, however, sufficient to explain the nature 52 of the exordium to our pupils. We must also indicate the easiest method of composing an exordium. "I would therefore add that he who has a speech to make should consider what he has to say; before whom, in whose defence, against whom, at what time and place, under what circumstances he has to speak; what is the popular opinion on the subject, and what the prepossessions of the judge are likely to be; and finally of what we should express our deprecation or desire." Nature herself will give him the knowledge of what he ought to say first. Now- 53 adays, however, speakers think that anything with which they choose to start is a proem and that whatever occurs to them, especially if it be a reflexion that catches their fancy, is an exordium. There are, no doubt, many points that can be introduced into an exordium which are common to other parts of a speech, but the best test of the appropriateness of a point to any part of a speech is to consider whether it would lose effect by being placed elsewhere. 'A most attrac- 54

 tive form of exordium is that which draws its material from the speech of our opponent, if only for the reason that the fact of its not having been composed at home, but having been improvised on the spot to meet the needs of the case increases the orator's reputation for natural talent by the readiness with which it is produced and carries conviction owing to the simple and ordinary language in which it is clothed.' As a result, even although the rest of the speech has been committed to writing and carefully elaborated, the whole of the speech will often be regarded as extempore, simply because its commencement is clearly not the result of previous study. Indeed a certain simplicity in the thoughts, 55 style, voice and look of the speaker will often produce so pleasing an effect in the exordium that even in a case where there is no room for doubt the confidence of the speaker should not reveal itself too openly. For as a rule the judge dislikes self-confidence in a pleader, and conscious of his rights tacitly demands the respectful deference of the orator. No less care must be taken to avoid exciting 56 any suspicion in this portion of our speech, and we should therefore give no hint of elaboration in the exordium, since any art that the orator may employ at this point seems to be directed solely at the judge. But to avoid all display of art in itself 57 requires consummate art: this admirable canon has been insisted on by all writers, though its force has been somewhat impaired by present conditions, since in certain trials, more especially those brought on capital charges or in the centumviral¹ court, the judges themselves demand the most finished and elaborate speeches, think themselves insulted, unless the orator shows signs of having exercised the utmost diligence in the preparation of his speech, and desire not merely to be instructed, but to be charmed. It is difficult to preserve the happy mean 58 in carrying this precept into effect : but by a skilful compromise it will be possible to give the impression of speaking with care but without elaborate design. The old rule still holds good that no unusual word, no overbold metaphor, no phrase derived from the lumber-rooms of antiquity or from poetic licence should be detected in the exordium. For our position 59 is not yet established, the attention of the audience is still fresh and imposes restraint upon us : as soon as we have won their good-will and kindled their interest, they will tolerate such freedom, more especially when we have reached topics whose natural richness prevents any licence of expression being noticed in the midst of the prevailing splendour of the passage. The ~~style of the exordium~~ 60 ~~should not resemble that of our purple patches~~ nor that of the argumentative and narrative portions of the speech, nor yet should it be prolix or continuously ornate : it should ~~rather seem simple and unpremeditated~~, while neither our words nor our looks should promise too much. For a method of pleading which conceals its art and makes no vain display, being as the Greeks say ἀνεπίφατος,¹ will often be best adapted to insinuate its way into the minds of our hearers. But in all this we must be guided by the extent to which it is expedient to impress the minds of the judges.

There is no point in the whole speech where confusion of memory or loss of fluency has a worse effect, 61

for a faulty exordium is like a face seamed with scars ; and he who runs his ship ashore while leaving port is certainly the least efficient of pilots. The length 62 of the exordium will be determined by the case ; simple cases require a short introduction only, longer exordia being best suited to cases which are complicated, suspect or unpopular. As for those who have laid it down as a law applying to all exordia that they should not be more than four sentences long, they are merely absurd. On the other hand undue length is equally to be avoided, lest ~~the head should seem~~ to have grown out of all proportion to the body and the judge should be wearied by that which ought to prepare him for what is to follow. The figure which the Greeks 63 call apostrophe, by which is meant the diversion of our words to address some person other than the judge, is entirely banned by some rhetoricians as far as the exordium is concerned, and for this they have some reason, since it would certainly seem to be more natural that we should specially address ourselves to those whose favour we desire to win. Occasionally however some striking expression of 64 thought is necessary in the exordium which can be given greater point and vehemence if addressed to some person other than the judge. In such a case what law or what preposterous superstition is to prevent us from adding force to such expression of our thought by the use of this figure ? For the 65 writers of text-books do not forbid it because they regard it as illicit, but because they think it useless. Consequently if its utility be proved, we shall have to employ it for the very reason for which we are now forbidden to do so. Moreover Demosthenes 66 turns to address Aeschines in his exordium,¹ while Cicero adopts the same device in several of his speeches, but more especially in the pro Ligario,² where he turns to address Tubero. His speech 67 would have been much less effective, if any other figure had been used, as will be all the more clearly realised, if the whole of that most vigorous passage "You are, then, in possession, Tubero, of the most valuable advantage that can fall to an accuser etc." be altered so as to be addressed to the judge. For it is a real and most unnatural diversion of the passage, which destroys its whole force, if we say "Tubero is then in possession of the most valuable advantage that can fall to an accuser." In the 68 original form Cicero attacks his opponent and presses him hard, in the passage as altered he would merely have pointed out a fact. The same thing results if you alter the turn of the passage in Demosthenes. Again did not Sallust when speaking against Cicero himself address his exordium to him and not to the judge? In fact he actually opens with the words "I should feel deeply injured by your reflexions on my character, Marcus Tullius," wherein he followed the precedent set by Cicero in his speech against Catiline where he opens with the words "How long will you continue to abuse our patience?" Finally to remove all reason for 69 feeling surprise at the employment of apostrophe, Cicero in his defence of Scaurus,³ on a charge of bribery (the speech is to be found in his Notebooks; for he defended him twice) actually introduces an imaginary person speaking on behalf of the accused, while in his pro Rabirio and his speech in defence of this same Scaurus on a charge of extortion he employs illustrations, and in the pro Cluentio, as I have already pointed out, introduces division into heads. Still such artifices, although they may be employed at times to good effect, are not to be indulged in indiscriminately, but only when there is strong reason for breaking the rule. The same remark applies to simile (which must however be brief), metaphor and other tropes, all of which are forbidden by our cautious and pedantic teachers of rhetoric, but which we shall none the less occasionally employ, unless indeed we are to disapprove of the magnificent example of irony in the pro Ligario to which I have already referred a few pages back. The rhetoricians have however been nearer the truth in their censure of certain other faults that may occur in the exordium. The stock exordium which can be suited to a number of different cases they style vulgar; it is an unpopular form but can sometimes be effectively employed and has often been adopted by some of the greatest orators. The exordium which might equally well be used by our opponent, they style common. That which our opponent can turn to his own advantage, they call interchangeable, that which is irrelevant to the case, detached, and that which is drawn from some other speech, transferred. In addition to these they censure others, as long and others as contrary to rule. Most of these faults are however not peculiar to the exordium, but may be found in any or every portion of a speech.

Such are the rules for the exordium, wherever it is employed. It may however sometimes be dispensed with. For occasionally it is superfluous, if the judge has been sufficiently prepared for our speech without it or if the case is such as to render such preparation unnecessary. Aristotle¹ indeed says that with good judges the exordium is entirely unnecessary. Sometimes however it is impossible to employ it, even if we desire to do so, when, for instance, the judge is much occupied, when time is short or superior authority forces us to embark upon the subject right away. On the other hand 73 it is at times possible to give the force of an exordium to other portions of the speech. For instance we may ask the judges in the course of our statement of the facts or of our arguments to give us their best attention and good-will, a proceeding which Prodicus recommended as a means of wakening them when they begin to nod. A good example is the following:² "Gaius Varenus, he who was killed 74 by the slaves of Ancharius—I beg you, gentlemen, to give me your best attention at this point." Further if the case involves a number of different matters, each section must be prefaced with a short introduction, such as "Listen now to what follows," or "I now pass to the next point." Even in the 75 proof there are many passages which perform the same function as an exordium, such as the passage in the *pro Cluentio*³ where Cicero introduces an attack on the censors and in the *pro Murena*⁴ when he apologises to Servius. But the practice is too common to need illustration.

However on all occasions when we have employed 76 the exordium, whether we intend to pass to the statement of facts or direct to the proof, our intention should be mentioned at the conclusion of the introduction, with the result that the transition to what follows will be smooth and easy. There is indeed a pedantic 77 and childish affectation in vogue in the schools of marking the transition by some epigram and seeking to win applause by this feat of legerdemain. Ovid is given to this form of affectation in his Metamorphoses, but there is some excuse for him owing to the fact that he is compelled to weld together subjects of the most diverse nature so as to form a continuous whole. But what necessity is there for an orator to gloss over his transitions or to attempt to deceive the judge, who requires on the contrary to be warned to give his attention to the sequence of the various portions of the speech? For instance the first part of our statement of the facts will be wasted, if the judge does not realise that we have reached that stage. Therefore, although we should not be too abrupt in passing to our statement of facts, it is best to do nothing to conceal our transition. Indeed, if the statement of fact on which we are about to embark is somewhat long and complicated, we shall do well to prepare the judge for it, as Cicero often does, most notably in the following passage: ¹ "The introduction to my exposition of this point will be rather longer than usual, but I beg you, gentlemen, not to take it ill. For if you get a firm grasp of the beginning, you will find it much easier to follow what comes last." This is practically all that I can find to say on the subject of the exordium. 78 79

II. It is a most natural and frequently necessary proceeding, that after preparing the mind of the judge in the manner described above we should indicate the nature of the subject on which he will have to give judgment: that is the statement of facts. In dealing with this question I shall deliberately pass over the divisions made by certain writers, who make too many classes and err on the side of subtlety. For they demand an explanation dealing not only with the facts of the case which is before the court, but with the person involved (as in the sentence,¹ "Marcus Lollius Palicanus, a Picentine of humble birth, a man gifted with loquacity rather than eloquence") or of the place where an incident occurred (as in the sentence² "Lampsacus, gentlemen, is a town situated on the Hellespont"), or of the time at which something occurred (as in the verse³

"In early spring, when on the mountains hoar
The snows dissolve"),

or of the causes of an occurrence, such as the historians are so fond of setting forth, when they explain the origin of a war, a rebellion or a pestilence. Further they style some statements of fact "complete,"³ and others "incomplete," a distinction which is self-evident. To this they add that our explanation may refer to the past (which is of course the commonest form), the present (for which compare Cicero's⁴ remarks about the excitement caused among the friends of Chrysogonus when his name was mentioned), or of the future (a form permissible only to prophets): for hypotyposis or picturesque description cannot be regarded as a statement of facts. However⁴ let us pass to matters of more importance.

The majority regard the statement of facts as being indispensable: but there are many considerations which show that this view is erroneous. In the first place there are some cases which are so brief, that they require only a brief summary rather than a full statement of the facts. This may apply to both⁵ parties to a suit, as for instance in cases where there is no necessity for explanation or where the facts are admitted and the whole question turns on a point of law, as it so often does in the centumviral court, as for example when we discuss, whether the heir of a woman who has died intestate should be her son or brother, or whether puberty is to be reckoned by age or by physical development. The same situation arises also in cases where the facts admit of full statement, but are well known to the judge or have been correctly set forth by a previous speaker. Sometimes again the statement of facts can be dispensed with only by one party, who is generally the plaintiff, either because it is sufficient for him to make a simple summary of his case or because it is more expedient for him to do so. It may, for instance, suffice to say, "I claim repayment of a certain sum of money which was lent on certain conditions" or "I claim a legacy in accordance with the terms of the will." It is for the other party to explain why these sums are not due to the plaintiff. Again it is sometimes sufficient and expedient to summarise a case in one sentence such as "I say that Horatius killed his sister." For the judge will understand the whole charge from this simple affirmation: the sequence of events and the motive for the deed will be matters for the defence to expound. On the other hand in some cases the accused may dispense with the statement of facts, when for instance the charge can neither be denied nor palliated, but turns solely on some point of law: the following case will illustrate my meaning. A man who has stolen from a temple money belonging to a private individual is accused of sacrilege: in such a case a confession will be more seemly than a full statement of facts: "We do not deny that the money was taken from the temple ; but the accuser is bringing a false accusation in charging my client with sacrilege, since the money was not consecrated, but private property : it is for you to decide whether under these circumstances sacrilege has been committed."

While however I think that there are occasional 9 cases where the statement of facts may be dispensed with, I disagree with those who say that there is no statement of facts when the accused simply denies the charge. This opinion is shared by Cornelius Celsus who holds that most cases of murder and all of bribery and extortion fall into this class. For he 10 thinks that the only statement of facts is that which gives a general account of the charge before the court. Yet he himself acknowledges that Cicero employed the statement of facts in his defence of Rabirius Postumus, in spite of the fact that Cicero denies that any money came into the hands of Rabirius (and this was the question at issue) and gives no explanations relating to the actual charge in his statement of facts. For my part I follow the very 11 highest authorities in holding that there are two forms of statement of facts in forensic speeches, the one expounding the facts of the case itself, the other setting forth facts which have a bearing on the case. I agree that a sentence such as "I did not kill 12 the man" does not amount to a statement of facts : but there will be a statement of facts, occasionally, too, a long one, in answer to the arguments put forward by the accuser : it will deal with the past life of the accused, with the causes which have brought an innocent man into peril, and other circumstances 13 such as show the charge to be incredible. For the accuser does not merely say "You killed him," but sets forth the facts proving his assertion: tragedy will provide an example, where Teucer accuses Ulysses of murdering Ajax, and states that he was found in a lonely place near the lifeless body of his enemy with a blood-stained sword in his hands. To this Ulysses does not merely reply that he did not do the deed, but adds that he had no quarrel with Ajax, the contest between them having been concerned solely with the winning of renown: he then goes on to say how he came to be in the lonely place, how he found Ajax lying lifeless and drew the sword from the wound. Then follow arguments based on these facts. But even when the accuser says "You were 14 found on the spot where your enemy was killed" and the accused says "I was not," a statement of facts is involved; for he must say where he was. Consequently cases of bribery and extortion will require as many statements of this kind as there are charges: the charges themselves will be denied, but it will be necessary to counter the arguments of the accuser either singly or all together by setting forth the facts in quite a different light. Is it, I ask you, 15 irrelevant for one accused of bribery to set forth his parentage, his past life and the services on which he relied for success in his candidature? And if a man is indicted for extortion, will it not be to his advantage to set forth not merely his past record, but also the reasons which have made the whole province or the accuser or a witness hostile to himself? If these are not statements of facts, neither 16 is the first portion of Cicero's¹ defence of Cluentius, beginning with the words "Aulus Cluentius Habitus." For there he says nothing about the charge of poisoning, but confines himself entirely to setting forth the reasons for the hostility of Cluentius' mother to her son. There are also statements 17 which do not set forth the facts of the case itself, but facts which are none the less relevant to the case: the speaker's purpose may be to illustrate the case by some parallel, as in the passage in the *Verrines*¹ about Lucius Domitius who crucified a shepherd because he admitted that he had used a hunting spear to kill the boar which he had brought him as a present; or he may desire to dispel some 18 charge that is irrelevant to the case as in the passage of the speech for Rabirius Postumus,² which runs as follows: "For when he came to Alexandria, gentlemen, the only means of saving his money which the king suggested to Postumus was that he should take charge of the royal household and act as a kind of steward." Or the orator may desire to heighten the effect of his charges, as Cicero³ does in his description of the journey of Verres.

BOOK IV. II. 13-16

Sometimes a fictitious statement is employed 19 either to stir the emotions of the judges, as in that passage of the *pro Roscio Amerino*⁴ dealing with Chrysogonus to which I referred just recently, or to entertain them with a show of wit, as in the passage of the *pro Cluentio*⁵ describing the brothers Caepasius: sometimes again a digression may be introduced to add beauty to the speech, as in the passage about Proserpine in the Verrines,⁶ beginning "It was here that a mother is once said to have sought her daughter." All these examples serve to show that he who denies a charge may not necessarily refrain from stating, but may actually state that very fact which he denies.

Even the assertion which I made above to the 20 effect that a statement of facts familiar to the judge is superfluous, is not to be taken too literally. My meaning is that it may be dispensed with, if the judge knows not merely what has been done, but takes a view of the facts which is favourable to our case. For the purpose of the statement of facts is 21 not merely to instruct, but rather to persuade the judge. Therefore, when we desire to influence him in some way or other, although he may require no instruction, we shall preface our statement with some such remarks as these: "I know that you are aware of the general nature of the case, but I trust you will not take it ill if I ask you to consider each point in detail." At times again we may pretend 22 that we are repeating the facts for the benefit of some new member of the jury,¹ at times that we do so with a view to letting every bystander as well realise the gross unfairness of our opponents' assertions. Under these circumstances our statement must be diversified by a free use of figures to avoid wearying those to whom the facts are familiar: we shall for instance use phrases such as "You remember," "It may perhaps be superfluous to dwell on this point," "But why should I say more, as you are well acquainted with the fact?", "You are not ignorant how this matter stands" and so on. Besides, if we are always to 23 regard as superfluous a statement of facts made before a judge who is familiar with the case, we may even go so far as to regard it as superfluous at times to plead the case at all.

There is a further question which is still more 24 frequently raised, as to whether the statement of facts should always follow immediately on the exordium. Those who hold that it should always do so must be admitted to have some reason on their side. For since the purpose of the exordium is to make the judge more favourably disposed and more attentive to our case and more amenable to instruction, and since the proof cannot be brought forward until the facts of the case are known, it seems right that the judge should be instructed in the facts without delay. But the practice may be altered by circumstances, unless it is contended that Cicero in his magnificent published defence of Milo delayed his statement too long by placing three questions before it; or unless it is argued that, if it had been held to be impermissible to defend a man at all who acknowledged that he had killed another, or if Milo's case had already been prejudged and condemnation passed by the senate, or if Gnaeus Pompeius, who in addition to exerting his influence in other ways had surrounded the court with an armed guard, had been regarded with apprehension as hostile to the accused, it would have served his case to set forth how Clodius had set an ambush for Milo. These three questions, then, served the purpose of an exordium, since they all of them were designed to prepare the minds of the judges. Again in the pro Vareno Cicero delayed his statement of facts until he had first rebutted certain allegations put forward by the prosecution. This may be done with advantage whenever we have not merely to rebut the charge, but to turn the tables on our opponents: thus after first rebutting the charge, we make our statement of facts the opening of an incrimination of the other party, just as in actual fighting we are most concerned to parry our adversary's blows before we strike him ourselves. There will also not 27 infrequently be certain cases, in which it is easy to rebut the charge that is under trial, but the conduct of which is hampered by the past life of our client and the many and serious crimes which he has committed. We must dispose of these first, in order that the judge may give a favourable hearing to our defence of the actual facts which form the question at issue. For example, if we have to defend Marcus Caelius, the best course for his advocate to adopt will be to meet the imputations of luxury, wantonness and immorality which are made against him before we proceed to the actual charge of poisoning. It is with these points that the speech of Cicero in his defence is entirely concerned. Is he then to go on to make a statement about the property of Palla and explain the whole question of rioting, a charge against which Caelius has already defended himself in the speech which he delivered on his own behalf? We however are the victims of the practice 28 of the schools in accordance with which certain points or themes as we call them are put forward for discussion, outside which our refutation must not go, and consequently a statement of facts always follows the exordium. It is this too that leads declaimers to take the liberty of inserting a statement of facts even when they speak second for their side. For when 29 they speak for the prosecution they introduce both a statement of facts, as if they were speaking first, and a refutation of the arguments for the defence, as if they were replying: and they are right in so doing. For since declamation is merely an exercise in forensic pleading, why should they not qualify themselves to speak either first or second¹? Those however who do not understand the reason for such a practice, think that when they appear in the courts they should stick to the custom of the schools with which they have become familiar. But even scholastic 30 rhetoricians occasionally substitute a brief summary for the full statement of the facts. For what statement of the case can be made when a wife is accusing a jealous husband of maltreating her, or a father is indicting his son turned Cynic before the censors for indecent behaviour²? In both cases the charge can be sufficiently indicated by one word placed in any part of the speech. But enough of these points.

BOOK IV. II. 26-29

BOOK IV. II. 29-33

I will now proceed to the method to be adopted §31 in ~~making our statement of facts~~. The statement of facts consists in the persuasive exposition of that which either has been done, or is supposed to have been done, or, to quote the definition given by Apollodorus, is a speech instructing the audience as to the nature of the case in dispute. Most writers, more especially those of the Isocratean school, hold that it should be lucid, brief and plausible (for it is of no importance if we substitute clear for lucid, or credible or probable for plausible). I agree with 32 this classification of its qualities, although Aristotle³ disagrees with Isocrates on one point, and pours scorn on his injunction to be brief, as though it were necessary that a statement should be either long or short and it were impossible to hit the happy mean. The followers of Theodorus on the other hand recognise only plausibility on the ground that it is not always expedient that our exposition should be either short or clear. It will be necessary 33

BOOK IV. II. 33-36

therefore for me to devote some care to the differentiation of the various features of this portion of a speech, in order that I may show under what circumstances each is specially useful.

The statement will be either wholly in our favour or wholly in that of our opponent or a mixture of both. If it is entirely in our own favour, we may rest content with the three qualities just mentioned, the result of which is to make it easier for the judge to understand, remember and believe what we say. Now I should regret that anyone should censure my 34 conduct in suggesting that a statement which is wholly in our favour should be plausible, when as a matter of fact it is true. There are many things which are true, but scarcely credible, just as there are many things which are plausible though false. It will therefore require just as much exertion on our part to make the judge believe what we say when it is true as it will when it is fictitious. These 35 good qualities, which I have mentioned above, do not indeed cease to be virtues in other portions of the speech; for it is our duty to avoid obscurity in every part of our pleading, to preserve due proportion throughout and to say nothing save what is likely to win belief. But they require special observance in that portion of the speech which is the first from which the judge can learn the nature of the case: if at this stage of the proceedings he fails to understand, remember or believe what we say, our labour is but lost in the remainder of the speech. 36

We shall achieve lucidity and clearness in our statement of facts, first by setting forth our story in words which are appropriate, significant and free from any taint of meanness, but not on the other hand farfetched or unusual, and secondly by giving a distinct account of facts, persons, times, places and causes, while our delivery must be adapted to our matter, so that the judge will take in what we say with the utmost readiness. This latter virtue is 37 disregarded by the majority of speakers who are used to the noisy applause of a large audience, whether it be a chance gathering or an assembly of claqueurs, and consequently are unnerved by the attentive silence of the courts. They feel that they have fallen short of eloquence, if they do not make everything echo with noise and clamour; they think that to state a matter simply is suited only to everyday speech such as falls within the capacity of any uneducated man, while all the time it is hard to say whether they are less willing or less capable of performing a task which they despise on account of its supposed easiness. For even when they have 38 tried everything, they will never find anything more difficult in the whole range of oratory than that which, once heard, all think they would have said,—a delusion due to the fact that they regard what has been said as having no merit save that of truth. But it is just when an orator gives the impression of absolute truth that he is speaking best. As it is, 39 when such persons as these get a fair field for stating their case, they select this as the precise occasion for affected modulations of the voice, throwing back their heads, thumping their sides and indulging in every kind of extravagance of statement, language and style. As a result, while the speech, from its very monstrosity, meets with applause, the case remains unintelligible. However, let us pass to another subject; my aim is to win favour for pointing out the right road rather than to give offence by rebuking such perversity.

BOOK IV. II. 36-39

The statement of facts will be brief, if in the first 40 place we start at that point of the case at which it begins to concern the judge, secondly avoid irrelevance, and finally cut out everything the removal of which neither hampers the activities of the judge nor harms our own case. For frequently conciseness 41 of detail is not inconsistent with length in the whole. Take for instance such a statement as the following: "I came to the harbour, I saw a ship, I asked the cost of a passage, the price was agreed, I went on board, the anchor was weighed, we loosed our cable and set out." Nothing could be terser than these assertions, but it would have been quite sufficient to say "I sailed from the harbour." And whenever the conclusion gives a sufficiently clear idea of the premisses, we must be content with having given a hint which will enable our audience to understand what we have left unsaid. Con- 42 sequently when it is possible to say "I have a young son," it is quite superfluous to say, "Being desirous of children I took a wife, a son was born whom I acknowledged and reared and brought up to manhood." For this reason some of the Greeks draw a distinction between a concise statement (the word they use is σύντομος) and a brief statement, the former being free from all superfluous matter, while the latter may conceivably omit something that requires to be stated. Personally, when I use the 43 word brevity, I mean not saying less, but not saying more than occasion demands. As for repetitions and tautologies and diffuseness, which some writers of textbooks tell us we must avoid, I pass them by;

they are faults which we should shun for other reasons beside our desire for brevity. But we must be 44 equally on our guard against the obscurity which results from excessive abridgment, and it is better to say a little more than is necessary than a little less. For though a diffuse irrelevance is tedious, the omission of what is necessary is positively dangerous. We must therefore avoid even the famous terseness 45 of Sallust (though in his case of course it is a merit), and shun all abruptness of speech, since a style which presents no difficulty to a leisurely reader, flies past a hearer and will not stay to be looked at again; and whereas the reader is almost always a man of learning, the judge often comes to his panel from the country side and is expected to give a decision on what he can understand. Consequently we must aim, perhaps everywhere, but above all in our statement of facts, at striking the happy mean in our language, and the happy mean may be defined as saying just what is necessary and just what is sufficient. By "just 46 what is necessary" I mean not the bare minimum necessary to convey our meaning; for our brevity must not be devoid of elegance, without which it would be merely uncouth: pleasure beguiles the attention, and that which delights us ever seems less long, just as a picturesque and easy journey tires us less for all its length than a difficult short cut through an arid waste. And I would never carry my desire 47 for brevity so far as to refuse admission to details which may contribute to the plausibility of our narrative. Simplify and curtail your statement of facts in every direction and you will turn it into something more like a confession. Moreover, the circumstances of the case will often necessitate a long statement of facts, in which case, as I have already enjoined, the judge should be prepared for it at the conclusion of the exordium. Next we must put forth all our art either to shorten it or to render it less tedious. We must do what we can to make 48 it less long by postponing some points, taking care however to mention what it is that we propose to postpone. Take the following as an example. "As regards his motives for killing him, his accomplices and the manner in which he disposed his ambush, I will speak when I come to the proof." Some 49 things indeed may be omitted altogether from our marshalling of the facts, witness the following example from Cicero,¹ "Fulcinus died; there are many circumstances which attended that event, but as they have little bearing on this case, I shall pass them by." Division of our statement into its various heads is another method of avoiding tedium: for example, "I will tell you first what preceded this affair, then what occurred in its actual development, and finally you shall hear its sequel." Such a 50 division will give the impression rather of three short than of one long statement. At times it will be well to interrupt our narrative by interjecting some brief remark like the following: "You have heard what happened before: now learn what follows." The judge will be refreshed by the fact that we have brought our previous remarks to a close and will prepare himself for what may be regarded as a fresh start. If however after employing all these artifices 51 our array of facts is still long, it will not be without advantage to append a summary at the end of it as a reminder: Cicero does this even at the close of a brief statement of facts in the *pro Ligario*¹: "To this day, Caesar, Quintus Ligarius is free from all blame: he left his home not merely without the least intention of joining in any war, but when there was not the least suspicion of any war etc."

The statement of fact will be credible, if in the first, 52 place we take care to say nothing contrary to nature, secondly if we assign reasons and motives for the facts on which the inquiry turns (it is unnecessary to do so with the subsidiary facts as well), and if we make the characters of the actors in keeping with the facts we desire to be believed: we shall for instance represent a person accused of theft as covetous, accused of adultery as lustful, accused of homicide as rash, or attribute the opposite qualities to these persons if we are defending them: further we must do the same with place, time and the like. It is also possible to treat the subject in such a way 53 as to give it an air of credibility, as is done in comedy and farce. For some things have such natural sequence and coherence that, if only the first portion of your statement is satisfactory, the judge will himself anticipate what you have got to say in the later part. It will also be useful to 54 scatter some hints of our proofs here and there, but in such a way that it is never forgotten that we are making a statement of facts and not a proof. Sometimes, however, we must also support our assertions by a certain amount of argument, though this must be short and simple: for instance in a case of poisoning we shall say, "He was perfectly well when he drank, he fell suddenly to the ground, and blackness and swelling of the body immediately supervened." The same result is produced by pre- 55 paratory remarks such as the following: "The accused is a strong man and was fully armed, while his opponents were weak, unarmed and suspecting no evil." We may in fact touch on everything that we propose to produce in our proof, while making our statement of facts, as for instance points connected with persons, cause, place, time, the instrument and occasion employed. Sometimes, when this resource is unavailable, we may even confess that the charge, though true, is scarcely credible, and that therefore it must be regarded as all the more atrocious; that we do not know how the deed was done or why, that, we are filled with amazement, but will prove our case. The best kind of preparatory remarks are those which cannot be recognised as such: Cicero, for instance, is extraordinarily happy in the way he mentions in advance everything that shows that Clodius lay in wait for Milo and not Milo for Clodius. The most effective stroke of all is his cunning feint of simplicity: "Milo, on the other hand, having been in the senate all day till the house rose, went home, changed his shoes and clothes, and waited for a short time, while his wife was getting ready, as is the way with women." What an absence of haste and premeditation this gives to Milo's proceedings. And the great orator secures this effect not merely by producing facts which indicate the slow and tardy nature of Milo's departure, but by the use of the ordinary language of everyday speech and a careful concealment of his art. Had he spoken otherwise, his words would by their very sound have warned the judge to keep an eye on the advocate. The majority of readers regard this passage as lacking in distinction, but this very fact merely serves to show how the art which is scarce detected by a reader succeeded in hoodwinking the judge. It is qualities of this kind that make the statement of facts credible. If a student requires to be told that we must avoid contradiction and inconsistency in our statement of facts, it will be vain to attempt to instruct him on the remaining points, although some writers of text-books produce this precept as if it were a mystery only discovered by their own personal penetration.

BOOK IV. II. 59-63

To these three qualities some add magnificence of diction or μεγαλοπρέπεια as they call it: this quality is not, however, suitable to all cases. For what place has language that rises above the ordinary level in the majority of private suits dealing with loans, letting and hiring and interdicts? Nor yet is it always expedient, as may be inferred from the passage just cited from the pro Milone. We must remember, too, that there are many cases in which confession, excuse or modification are necessary with regard to our statements: and magnificence is a quality wholly out of keeping with such procedure. Magnificence of diction is therefore no more specially appropriate to the statement of facts than language calculated to excite pity or hatred, or characterised by dignity, charm or wit. Each of these qualities is admirable in its proper place, but none can be regarded as the peculiar and inalienable property of this portion of the speech.

Theodectes asserts that the statement of facts should not merely be magnificent, but attractive in style. But this quality again though suitable enough to the statement of facts, is equally so in other portions of the speech. There are others who add palpability, which the Greeks call ἐνάρπεια. And I will not conceal the fact that Cicero¹ himself 64 holds that more qualities are required. For in addition to demanding that it should be plain, brief and credible, he would have it clear, characteristic and worthy of the occasion. But everything in a speech should be characteristic and worthy of the occasion as far as possible. Palpability, as far as I understand the term, is no doubt a great virtue, when a truth requires not merely to be told, but to some extent obtruded, still it may be included under lucidity. Some, however, regard this quality as actually being injurious at times, on the ground that in certain cases it is desirable to obscure the truth. This contention is, however, absurd. For he who 65 desires to obscure the situation, will state what is false in lieu of the truth, but must still strive to secure an appearance of palpability for the facts which he narrates.

A chance turn of the discussion has led us to a 66 difficult type of statement of facts. I will therefore proceed to speak of those in which the facts are against us. Under such circumstances some have held that we should omit the statement of facts altogether. Nothing can be more easy, except perhaps to throw up the case altogether. But suppose you undertake a case of this kind with some good reason. It is surely the worst art to admit the badness of the case by keeping silence. We can hardly hope that the judge will be so dense as to give a decision in favour of a case which he knows we were unwilling to place before him. I do not of course deny that just as there may be 67 some points which you should deny in your statement.

BOOK IV. II. 67-70

of facts, others which you should add, and yet again others that you should alter, so there may be some which you should pass over in silence. But still only those points should be passed over which we ought and are at liberty to treat in this way. This is sometimes done for the sake of brevity, as in the phrase "He replied as he thought fit." We must therefore distinguish between case and case. In those where there is no question of guilt but only of law, we may, even though the facts be against us, admit the truth. "He took money from the temple, but it was private property, and therefore he is not guilty of sacrilege. He abducted a maiden, but the father¹ can have no option as to his fate. He assaulted a freeborn boy, and the latter hanged himself, but that is no reason for the author of the assault to be awarded capital punishment as having caused his death; he will instead pay 10,000 sesterces, the fine imposed by law for such a crime." But even in making these admissions we may to some extent lessen the odium caused by the statement of our opponent. For even our slaves extenuate their own faults. In some cases, too, we may mitigate a bad impression by words which avoid the appearance of a statement of facts. We may say, for instance, "He did not, as our opponent asserts, enter the temple with the deliberate intention of theft nor seek a favourable occasion for the purpose, but was led astray by the opportunity, the absence of custodians, and the sight of the money (and money has always an undue influence on the mind of man), and so yielded to temptation. What does that matter? He committed the offence and is a thief. It is useless to defend an act to the punishment of which we can raise no objection." Again we may sometimes go near condemning our client ourselves. "Do you wish me to say that you were under the influence of wine? that you made a mistake? that the darkness deceived you? That may be true. But still you committed an assault on a freeborn boy; pay your 10,000 sesterces." Sometimes we may fortify our case in advance by a preliminary summary, from which we proceed to the full statement of facts. All the evidence points to the guilt of three sons who had conspired against their father. After drawing lots they entered their father's bedroom while he slept, one following the other in the order predetermined and each armed with a sword. None of them had the heart to kill him, he woke and they confessed all. If, however, the father, who has divided his estate among them and is defending them when accused of parricide, pleads as follows: "As regards my defence against the law, it suffices to point out, that these young men are charged with parricide in spite of the fact that their father still lives and is actually appearing on behalf of his children. What need is there for me to set forth the facts as they occurred since the law does not apply to them? But if you desire me to confess my own guilt in the matter, I was a hard father to them and watched over my estate, which would have been better managed by them, with miserly tenacity." And if he then should add, "they were spurred to attempt the crime by others who had more indulgent fathers; but their real feelings towards their father have been proved by the result; they could not bring themselves to kill him. It would have been quite unnecessary for them to take an oath to kill him, if they had really had the heart to do the deed, while the only explanation of their drawing lots is that each of them wished to avoid the commission of the crime." If such were his pleading, all these pleas would, such as they are, find the judges all the more disposed to mercy, since the brief defence offered in the first summary statement would have paved the way for them. But if the question is whether 75 an act has been committed or what its nature may be, even though everything be against us, how can we avoid a statement of facts without gross neglect of our case? The accuser has made a statement of facts, and has done so not merely in such a way as to indicate what was done, but has added such comments as might excite strong prejudice against us and made the facts seem worse than they are by the language which he has used. On the top of this have come the proofs, while the peroration has kindled the indignation of the judges and left them full of anger against us. The judge naturally 76 waits to hear what we can state in our behalf. If we make no statement, he cannot help believing that our opponent's assertions are correct and that their tone represents the truth. What are we to do then? Are we to restate the same facts? Yes, if the question turns on the nature of the act, as it will if there is no doubt about the commission, but we must restate them in a different way, alleging other motives and another purpose and putting a different complexion on the case. Some 77 imputations we may mitigate by the use of other words; luxury will be softened down into generosity, avarice into economy, carelessness into simplicity, and I shall seek to win a certain amount of favour or pity by look, voice and attitude. Sometimes a frank confession is of itself sufficient to move the jury to tears. And I should like to ask those who differ from me whether they are prepared to defend what they have refused to state, or no. For if they refuse either to defend or to state the facts, they will be giving away their whole case. If, on the other hand, they do propose to put in a defence, they must at least, as a rule, set forth what they intend to justify. Why then not state fully facts which can be got rid of and must in fact be pointed out to make that possible? Or again what difference is there between a proof and a statement of facts save that the latter is a proof put forward in continuous form, while a proof is a verification of the facts as put forward in the statement? Let us consider therefore whether under such circumstances the statement should not be somewhat longer and fuller than usual, since we shall require to make some preliminary remarks and to introduce certain special arguments (note that I say arguments, and not argumentation), while it will add greatly to the force of our defence if we assert not once nor twice that we shall prove what we say is true and that the significance of the facts cannot be brought out by one opening statement, bidding them wait, delay forming their opinions and hope for the best. Finally it is important to include in our statement anything that can be given a different complexion from that put upon it by our opponent. Otherwise even an exordium will be superfluous in a case of this kind. For what is its purpose if not to make the judge better disposed for the investigation of the case? And yet it will be agreed that the exordium is never more useful than when it is necessary to divert the judge from some prejudice that he has formed against us. Con- 81 jectural¹ cases, on the other hand—that is to say questions of fact—require a statement, which will more often deal with the circumstances from which a knowledge of the point at issue may be derived than with the actual point which is under trial. When the accuser states these circumstances in such a manner as to throw suspicion on the case for the defence, and the accused has consequently to dispel that suspicion, the facts must be presented to the judge in quite a different light by the latter. But, 82

BOOK IV. II. 70-74

it may be urged, some arguments are strong when put forward in bulk, but far less effective when employed separately. My answer is that this remark does not affect the question whether we ought to make a statement of fact, but concerns the question how it should be made. For what is there to prevent us from amassing and producing a number of arguments in the statement, if that is likely to help our cause? Or from subdividing our statement of facts and appending the proofs to their respective sections and so passing on to what remains to be said? Neither do I agree with those who assert that 83
the order of our statement of facts should always follow the actual order of events, but have a preference for adopting the order which I consider most suitable. For this purpose we can employ a variety of figures. Sometimes, when we bring up a point in a place better suited to our purpose, we may pretend that it had escaped our notice;

occasionally, too, we may inform the judge that we shall adhere to the natural order for the remainder of our statement, since by so doing we shall make our case clearer, while at times after stating a fact, we may append the causes which preceded it. For 84 there is no single law or fixed rule governing the method of defence. We must consider what is most advantageous in the circumstances and nature of the case, and treat the wound as its nature dictates, dressing at once or, if the dressing can be delayed, applying a temporary bandage. Again I 85 do not regard it as a crime to repeat a statement of a fact more than once, as Cicero does in the pro Cluentio. It is not merely permissible, but sometimes necessary, as in trials for extortion and all complicated cases; and only a lunatic will allow a superstitious observance of rules to lead him counter to the interests of his case. The reason for placing 86 the statement of facts before the proof is to prevent the judge from being ignorant of the question at issue. Why then, if each individual point has to be proved or refuted, should not each individual point be stated as well? If my own experience may be trusted, I know that I have followed this practice in the courts, whenever occasion demanded it, and my procedure has been approved both by learned authorities and the judges themselves, while the duty of setting forth the case was generally entrusted to me. I am not boasting, for there are many with whom I have been associated as counsel, who can bring me to book if I lie. On the other hand this is no reason, 87 for not following the order of events, as a general rule. Indeed inversion of the order has at times a most unhappy effect, as for example if you should mention first that a woman has brought forth and then that she has conceived, or that a will has been read and then that it has been signed. In such cases, if you should happen to have mentioned the later incident, it is better to say nothing about the former, which must quite obviously have come first.

Sometimes, too, we get false statements of facts; 88 these, as far as actual pleading in the courts is concerned, fall into two classes. In the first case the statement depends on external support; Publius Clodius, for instance, relied on his witnesses when he stated that he was at Interamna on the night when he committed abominable sacrilege at Rome. The other has to be supported by the speaker's native talent, and sometimes consists simply in an assumption of modesty, which is, I imagine, the reason why it is called a gloss,¹ while at other times it will be concerned with the question at issue. Whichever of these two forms 89 we employ, we must take care, first that our fiction is within the bounds of possibility, secondly that it is consistent with the persons, dates and places involved and thirdly that it presents a character and sequence that are not beyond belief: if possible, it should be connected with something that is admittedly true and should be supported by some argument that forms part of the actual case. For if we draw out fictions entirely from circumstances lying outside the case, the liberty which we have taken in resorting to falsehood will stand revealed. Above all we must see that we do not contradict 90 ourselves, a slip which is far from rare on the part of spinners of fiction: for some things may put a most favourable complexion on portions of our case, and yet fail to agree as a whole. Further, what we say must not be at variance with the admitted truth. Even in the schools, if we desire a gloss, we must not look for it outside the facts laid down by our theme. In either case the orator should bear clearly in mind throughout his whole speech what the fiction is to which he has committed himself, since we are apt to forget our falsehoods, and there is no doubt about the truth of the proverb that a liar should have a good memory. But whereas, if the question turns on some act of our own, we must make one statement and stick to it, if it turns on an act committed by others, we may cast suspicion on a number of different points. In certain controversial themes of the schools, however, in which it is assumed that we have put a question and received no reply, we are at liberty to enumerate all the possible answers that might have been given. But we must remember only to invent such things as cannot be checked by evidence: I refer to occasions when we make our own minds speak (and we are the only persons who are in their secret) or put words in the mouth of the dead (for what they say is not liable to contradiction) or again in the mouth of someone whose interests are identical with ours (for he will not contradict), or finally in the mouth of our opponent (for he will not be believed if he does deny). Glosses drawn from dreams and superstitions have long since lost their value, owing to the very ease with which they can be invented. But it will avail us little to use glosses in a statement of fact, unless they are consistent throughout the whole of our speech, more especially as certain things can only be proved by persistent assertion. Take for instance the case of the parasite who claims as his son a young man who has been thrice disinherited by a wealthy father and thrice restored to his own. He will be able to put forward as a gloss or plea that poverty was the reason why he exposed the child, that he assumed the rôle of a parasite because his son was in the house in question and, lastly, that the reason why the young man was thrice disinherited was simply that he was not the son of the man who disinherited him. But unless 96 every word that he utters reveals an ardent paternal affection, hatred for his wealthy opponent and anxiety on behalf of the youth, who will, he knows, be exposed to serious danger if he remains in the house where he is the victim of such dislike, he will be unable to avoid creating the suspicion that he has been suborned to bring the action.

It sometimes happens in the controversial themes 97 of the schools, though I doubt whether it could ever occur in the courts, that both sides employ the same gloss and support it on their own behalf. An 98 example of this may be found in the theme which runs as follows. "A wife has stated to her husband that her stepson has attempted to seduce her and that a time and place have been assigned for their meeting: the son has brought the same charge against his stepmother, with the exception that a different time and place are mentioned. The father finds the son in the place mentioned by the wife, and the wife in the place mentioned by the son. He divorces her, and then, as she says nothing in her own defence, disinherits the son." No defence can be put forward for the son which is not also a defence of the stepmother. However, what is com- 99 mon to both sides of the case will be stated, and then arguments will be drawn from a comparison of the characters of the two parties, from the order in which they laid information against each other and from the silence of the divorced wife. Still we must not ignore the fact that there are some cases which do not admit of any form of gloss, but must be defended forthright. An example is provided by the case of the rich man who scourged the statue of a poor man who was his enemy, and was subsequently indicted for assault. Here no one can deny that the act was outrageous, but it may be possible to maintain that it is not punishable by law.

If, however, part of the statement of facts tells in our favour and part against us, we must consider whether in view of the circumstances of the case the parts, in question should be blent or kept apart. If the points which are damaging to our case be in the majority, the points which are in its favour will be swamped. Under those circumstances it will be best to keep them apart and, after setting forth and proving the points which help our case, to meet the rest by employing the remedies mentioned above. If, on the other hand, it be the points in our favour which predominate, we may even blend them with the others, since thus the traitors in our camp will have less force. None the less these points, both good and bad, must not be set forth naked and helpless: those in our favour must be supported by some argument, and then reasons must be added why the points which tell against us should not be believed; since if we do not distinguish clearly between the two, it is to be feared that those which are favourable may suffer from their bad company.

Further rules are laid down with regard to the statement of fact, forbidding us to indulge in digression, apostrophe or argumentation or to put our words into the mouths of others. Some even add that we should make no appeal to the passions. These rules should for the most part be observed, indeed they should never be infringed unless the circumstances absolutely demand it. If our state- 104 ment is to be clear and brief, almost anything can be justified sooner than digression. And if we do introduce a digression, it must always be short and of such a nature that we give the impression of having been forced from our proper course by some uncontrollable emotion. The passage in Cicero¹ about the marriage of Sasia is a good example of this. "What incredible wickedness in a 105 woman! Unheard of in the history of mankind till she dared the sin! What unbridled and unrestrained lust, what amazing daring! One might have thought that, even if she had no regard for the vengeance of heaven and the opinion of man, she would at least have dreaded that night of all nights and those torches that lighted her to the bridal bed: that she would have shrunk in horror from the threshold of her chamber, from her daughter's room and the very walls that had witnessed her former marriage." As to addressing another in place of 106 the judge, it may be a means of making a point with greater brevity, and give it greater force. On this subject I hold the same view that I expressed in dealing with the exordium, as I do on the subject of impersonation. This artifice however is employed not only by Servius Sulpicius in his speech on behalf of Aufidia, when he cries "Am I to suppose that you were drowsed with sleep or weighed down by some heavy lethargy?" but by Cicero¹ as well, when in a passage which, like the above, belongs to the statement of facts, in speaking of the ships' captains he says, "You will give so much to enter, etc." Again 107 in the *pro Cluentio*² does not the conversation between Staienus and Bulbus conduce to speed and enhance the credibility of the statements? In case it should be thought that Cicero did this without design (quite an incredible supposition in his case), I would point out that in the *Partitiones*³ he lays it down that the statement of facts should be characterised by passages which will charm and excite admiration or expectation, and marked by unexpected turns, conversations between persons and appeals to every kind of emotion. We shall, as I 108 have already said, never argue points in the statement of facts, but we may sometimes introduce arguments, as for example Cicero does in the pro Ligario,⁴ when he says that he ruled his province in such a way that it was to his interest that peace should continue. We shall sometimes also, if occasion demand, insert a brief defence of the facts in the statement and trace the reasons that led up to them. For we must state our facts like advocates, 109 not witnesses. A statement in its simplest form will run as follows, "Quintus Ligarius went out as legate to C. Considius." But how will Cicero⁵ put it? "Quintus Ligarius," he says, "set out for Africa as legate to Gaius Considius at a time when there was no thought of war." And again elsewhere⁶ 110 he says, "Not only not to war, but to a country where there was no thought of war." And when the sense would have been sufficiently clear had he said no more than "Quintus Ligarius would not suffer himself to be entangled in any transaction,"¹ he adds "for he had his eyes fixed on home and wished to return to his own people." Thus he made what he stated credible by giving a reason for it and at the same time coloured it with emotion.

¹ pro Lig. i. 2.² ib. ii. 4.

I am therefore all the more surprised at those 111 who hold that there should be no appeal to the emotions in the statement of facts. If they were to say "Such appeals should be brief and not on the scale on which they are employed in the peroration," I should agree with them; for it is important that the statement should be expeditious. But why, while I am instructing the judge, should I refuse to move him as well? Why should I not, if it is 112 possible, obtain that effect at the very opening of the case which I am anxious to secure at its conclusion, more especially in view of the fact that I shall find the judge far more amenable to the cogency of my proof, if I have previously filled his mind with anger or pity? Does not Cicero,² in his 113 description of the scourging of a Roman citizen, in a few brief words stir all the emotions, not merely by describing the victim's position, the place where the outrage was committed and the nature of the punishment, but also by praising the courage with which he bore it? For he shows us a man of the highest character who, when beaten with rods, uttered not a moan nor an entreaty, but only cried that he was a Roman citizen, thereby bringing shame on his oppressor and showing his confidence in the law. Again does he not throughout the 114 whole of his statement excite the warmest indignation at the misfortunes of Philodamus³ and move us even to tears when he speaks of his punishment and describes, or rather shows us as in a picture, the father weeping for the death of his son and the son for the death of his father? What can any peroration present that is more calculated to stir our pity? If you wait for the peroration to stir your hearer's emotions over circumstances which you have recorded unmoved in your statement of facts, your appeal will come too late. The judge is already familiar with them and hears their mention without turning a hair, since he was unstirred when they were first recounted to him. Once the habit of mind is formed, it is hard to change it. 115

For my own part (for I will not conceal my opinion, though it rests rather on actual examples than on rules), I hold that the statement of fact more than any portion of the speech should be adorned with the utmost grace and charm. But much will depend on the nature of the subject which we have to set forth. In slighter cases, such as are the majority of private suits, the decoration must be restrained and fit close to the subject, while the utmost care must be exercised in choice of words. The words which in our purple passages are swept along by the force of our eloquence and lost in the profusion of our language, must in cases such as these be clear and, as Zeno says, "steeped with meaning." The rhythm should be unobtrusive, but as attractive as possible, while the figures must neither be derived from poetry nor such as are contrary to current usage, though warranted by the authority of antiquity (for it is important that our language should be entirely normal), but should be designed to relieve tedium by their variety and should be frequently 116 117 118 changed to relax the strain of attention. Thus we shall avoid repeating the same terminations and escape monotony of rhythm and a stereotyped turn of phrase. For the statement of facts lacks all the other allurements of style and, unless it is characterised by this kind of charm, will necessarily fall flat. Moreover there is no portion of a speech at which 119 the judge is more attentive, and consequently nothing that is well said is lost. And the judge is, for some reason or other, all the more ready to accept what charms his ear and is lured by pleasure to belief. When on the other hand the subject is on a larger 120 scale, we have a chance to excite horror by our narration of abominable wrongs or pity by a tale of woe: but we must do so in such a way as not to exhaust our stock of emotions on the spot, but merely to indicate our harrowing story in outline so that it may at once be clear what the completed picture is like to be. Again I am far from dis- 121 approving of the introduction of some striking sentence designed to stimulate the judge's jaded palate. The best way of so doing is the interposition of a short sentence like the following: "Milo's slaves did what everyone would have wished his own slaves to do under similar circumstances"¹: at times we may even be a little more daring and produce something like the following: "The mother-in-law wedded her son-in-law: there were no witnesses, none to sanction the union, and the omens were dark and sinister."² If this was 122 done in days when every speech was designed for practical purposes rather than display and the courts were far stricter than to-day, how much more should we do it now, when the passion for producing a thrill of pleasure has forced its way even into cases where a man's life or fortunes are in peril? I shall say later to what extent I think we should indulge popular taste in this respect: in the meantime I shall admit that some such indulgence is necessary. A powerful effect may be created if to the actual 123 facts of the case we add a plausible picture of what occurred, such as will make our audience feel as if they were actual eyewitnesses of the scene. Such is the description introduced by Marcus Caelius in his speech against Antonius. "For they found him lying prone in a drunken slumber, snoring with all the force of his lungs, and belching continually, while the most distinguished of his female companions sprawled over every couch, and the rest of the seraglio lay round in all directions. They 124 however perceived the approach of the enemy and, half-dead with terror, attempted to arouse Antonius, called him by name, heaved up his head, but all in vain, while one whispered endearing words into his ear, and another slapped him with some violence. At last he recognised the voice and touch of each and tried to embrace her who happened to be nearest. Once wakened he could not sleep, but was too drunk to keep awake, and so was bandied to and fro between sleeping and waking in the hands of his centurions and his paramours." Could you find anything more plausible in imagination, more vehement in censure or more vivid in description?

There is another point to which I must call atten- 125 tion, namely the credit which accrues to the statement of facts from the authority of the speaker. Now such authority should first and foremost be the reward of our manner of life, but may also be conferred by our style of eloquence. For the more dignified and serious our style, the greater will be the weight that it will lend to our assertions. It is therefore specially important in this part of our speech to avoid anything suggestive of artful design, for the judge is never more on his guard than at this stage. Nothing must seem fictitious, nought betray anxiety; everything must seem to spring from the case itself rather than the art of the orator. But our modern orators cannot endure this and imagine that their art is wasted unless it obtrudes itself, whereas as a matter of fact the moment it is detected it ceases to be art. We are the slaves of applause and think it the goal of all our effort. And so we betray to the judges what we wish to display to the bystanders.

There is also a kind of repetition of the statement which the Greeks call ἐπιδίγησις. It belongs to declamation rather than forensic oratory, and was invented to enable the speaker (in view of the fact that the statement should be brief) to set forth his facts at greater length and with more profusion of ornament, as a means of exciting indignation or pity. I think that this should be done but rarely and that we should never go to the extent of repeating the statement in its entirety. For we can attain the same result by a repetition only of parts. Anyone, however, who desires to employ this form of repetition, should touch but lightly on the facts when making his statement and should content himself with merely indicating what was done, while promising to set forth how it was done more fully when the time comes for it.

Some hold that the statement of facts should always begin by referring to some person, whom we must praise if he is on our side, and abuse if he is on the side of our opponents. It is true that this is very often done for the good reason that a law-suit must take place between persons. Persons may however also be introduced with all their attendant circumstances, if such a procedure is likely to prove useful. For instance, "The father of my client, gentlemen, was Aulus Cluentius Habitus, a man whose character, reputation and birth made him the leading man not only in his native town of Larinum, but in all the surrounding district."¹ Or again they may be introduced without such circumstances, as in the passage beginning "For Quintus Ligarius etc."² Often, too, we may commence with a fact as Cicero does in the *pro Tullio*³: "Marcus Tullius has a farm which he inherited from his father in the territory of Thurium," or Demosthenes in the speech in defence of Ctesiphon,⁴—"On the outbreak of the Phocian war."

As regards the conclusion of the statement of facts, there is a controversy with those who would have the statement end where the issue to be determined begins. Here is an example. "After these events the praetor Publius Dolabella issued an interdict in the usual form dealing with rioting and employment of armed men, ordering, without any exception, that Aebutius should restore the property from which he had ejected Caecina. He stated that he had done so. A sum of money was deposited. It is for you to decide to whom this money is to go."⁵ This rule can always be observed by the prosecutor, but not always by the defendant.

III. In the natural order of things the statement of fact is followed by the verification. For it is necessary to prove the points which we stated with the proof in view. But before I enter on this portion, I have a few words to say on the opinions held by certain rhetoricians. Most of them are in the habit, as soon as they have completed the statement of facts, of digressing to some pleasant and attractive topic with a view to securing the utmost amount of favour from their audience. This practice 2 originated in the display of the schools of declamation and thence extended to the courts as soon as causes came to be pleaded, not for the benefit of the parties concerned, but to enable the advocates to flaunt their talents. I imagine that they feared that if the slender stream of concise statement, such as is generally required, were followed by the pugnacious tone inevitable in the arguing of the case, the speech would fall flat owing to the postponement of the pleasures of a more expansive eloquence. The ob- 3 jection to this practice lies in the fact that they do this without the slightest consideration of the difference between case and case or reflecting whether what they are doing will in any way assist them, on the assumption that it is always expedient and always necessary. Consequently they transfer striking thoughts from the places which they should have occupied elsewhere and concentrate them in this portion of the speech, a practice which involves either the repetition of a number of things that they have already said or their omission from the place which was really theirs owing to the fact that they have already been said. I admit however that this 4 form of digression can be advantageously appended, not merely to the statement of facts, but to each of the different questions or to the questions as a whole, so long as the case demand, or at any rate permit it. Indeed such a practice confers great distinction and adornment on a speech, but only if the digression fits in well with the rest of the speech and follows naturally on what has preceded, not if it is thrust in like a wedge parting what should naturally come together. For there is no part of a speech so closely 5 connected with any other as the statement with the proof, though of course such a digression may be intended as the conclusion of the statement and the beginning of the proof. There will therefore sometimes be room for digression; for example if the end of the statement has been concerned with some specially horrible theme, we may embroider the theme as though our indignation must find immediate vent. This, however, should only be done if 6 there is no question about the facts. Otherwise it is more important to verify your charge than to heighten it, since the horrible nature of a charge is in favour of the accused, until the charge is proved. For it is just the most flagrant crimes that are the most difficult to prove. Again a digression 7 may be advantageous if after setting forth the services rendered by your client to his opponent you denounce the latter for his ingratitude, or after producing a variety of charges in your statement, you point out the serious danger in which the advancement of such charges is likely to involve you. But all these di- 8 gressions should be brief. For as soon as he has heard the facts set forth in order, the judge is in a hurry to get to the proof and desires to satisfy himself of the correctness of his impressions at the earliest possible moment. Further, care must be taken not to nullify the effect of the statement by diverting the minds of the court to some other theme and wearying them by useless delay.

But, though such digressions are not always necessary at the end of the statement, they may form a very useful preparation for the examination of the main question, more especially if at first sight it presents an aspect unfavourable to our case, if we have to support a harsh law or demand severe punishment. For this is the place for inserting what may be regarded as a second exordium with a view to exciting or mollifying the judge or disposing him to lend a favouring ear to our proofs. Moreover we can do this with all the greater freedom and vehemence at this stage of the proceedings since the case is already known to the judge. We shall therefore employ such utterances as emollients to soften the harder elements of our statement, in order that the ears of the jury may be more ready to take in what we have to say in the sequel and to grant us the justice which we ask. For it is hard to persuade a man to do anything against the grain. It is also important on such occasions to know whether the judge prefers equity or a strict interpretation of the law, since the necessity for such digression will vary accordingly.

Such passages may also serve as a kind of peroration after the main question. The Greeks call this παρέκβασις, the Romans egressus or egressio (digression). They may however, as I have said, be of various kinds and may deal with different themes in any portion of the speech. For instance we may extol persons or places, describe regions, record historical or even legendary occurrences. As examples I may cite the praise of Sicily and the rape of Proserpine¹ in the Verrines, or the famous recital of the virtues of Gneius Pompeius in the pro Cornelio,² where the great orator, as though the course of his eloquence had been broken by the mere mention of the general's name, interrupts the topic on which he had already embarked and digresses forthwith to sing his praises. Παρέκβασις may, I think, be defined as the 14 handling of some theme, which must however have some bearing on the case, in a passage that involves digression from the logical order of our speech. I do not see therefore why it should be assigned a special position immediately following on the statement of facts any more than I understand why they think that the name is applicable only to a digression where some statement has to be made, when there are so many different ways in which a speech may leave the direct route. For whatever we say that falls 15 outside the five divisions of the speech already laid down is a digression, whether it express indignation, pity, hatred, rebuke, excuse, conciliation or be designed to rebut invective. Other similar occasions for digression on points not involved by the question at issue arise when we amplify or abridge a topic, make any kind of emotional appeal or introduce any of those topics which add such charm and elegance to oratory, topics that is to say such as luxury, avarice, religion, duty : but these would hardly seem to be digressions as they are so closely attached to arguments on similar subjects that they form part of the texture of the speech. There are however a 16 number of topics which are inserted in the midst of matter which has no connexion with them, when for example we strive to excite, admonish, appease, entreat or praise the judge. Such passages are innumerable. Some will have been carefully prepared beforehand, while others will be produced to suit the occasion or the necessity of the moment, if anything extraordinary should occur in the course of our pleading, such as an interruption, the intervention of some individual or a disturbance. For example, 17 this made it necessary for Cicero to digress even in the exordium when he was defending Milo, as is clear from the short speech¹ which he made on that occasion. But the orator who makes some preface to the main question or proposes to follow up his proofs with a passage designed to commend them to the jury, may digress at some length. On the other hand, if he breaks away in the middle of his speech, he should not be long in returning to the point from which he departed.

IV. After the statement of facts some place the *proposition*² which they regard as forming a division of a forensic speech. I have already expressed my opinion of this view.³ But it seems to me that the beginning of every proof is a proposition, such as often occurs in the demonstration of the main question and sometimes even in the enunciation of individual arguments, more especially of those which are called ἐπιχειρήματα.⁴ But for the moment I shall speak of the first kind. It is not always necessary to employ it. The nature of the main question 2 is sometimes sufficiently clear without any proposition, especially if the statement of facts ends exactly where the question begins. Consequently the recapitulation generally employed in the case of arguments is sometimes placed immediately after the statement of facts. "The affair took place, as I have described, gentlemen: he that laid the ambush was defeated, violence was conquered by violence, or rather I should say audacity was crushed by valour."¹ Sometimes proposition is highly advantageous, more especially when the fact cannot be defended and the question turns on the definition of the fact; as for example in the case of the man who has taken the money of a private individual from a temple: we shall say, "My client is charged with sacrilege. It is for you to decide whether it was sacrilege," so that the judge may understand that his sole duty is to decide whether the charge is tantamount to sacrilege. The same method may be employed⁴ in obscure or complicated cases, not merely to make the case clearer, but sometimes also to make it more moving. This effect will be produced, if we at once support our pleading with some such words as the following: "It is expressly stated in the law that for any foreigner who goes up on to the wall the penalty is death. You are undoubtedly a foreigner, and there is no question but that you went up on to the wall. The conclusion is that you must submit to the penalty." For this proposition forces a confession upon our opponent and to a certain extent accelerates the decision of the court. It does more than indicate the question, it contributes to its solution.

BOOK IV. IV. 2-5

Propositions may be single, double or manifold:⁵ this is due to more than one reason. For several charges may be combined, as when Socrates was accused of corrupting the youth and of introducing new superstitions; while single propositions may be made up of a number of arguments, as for instance when Aeschines is accused of misconduct as an ambassador on the ground that he lied, failed to carry out his instructions, wasted time and accepted bribes. The defence may also contain several propositions: for instance against a claim for money we may urge, "Your claim is invalid; for you had no right to act as agent nor had the party whom you represent any right to employ an agent: further, he is not the heir of the man from whom it is asserted that I borrowed the money, nor am I his debtor." These propositions can be multiplied at pleasure, but 7 it is sufficient to give an indication of my meaning. If propositions are put forward singly with the proofs; appended, they will form several distinct propositions: if they are combined, they fall under the head of partition.

A proposition may also be put forward unsupported, as is generally done in conjectural cases: "The formal accusation is one of murder, but I also charge the accused with theft." Or it may be accompanied by a reason: "Gaius Cornelius is guilty of an offence against the state; for when he was tribune of the plebs, he himself read out his bill to the public assembly." ¹ In addition to these forms of proposition, we can also introduce a proposition of our own, such as "I accuse him of adultery," or may use the proposition of our opponent, such as "The charge brought against me is one of adultery," or finally we may employ a proposition which is common to both sides, such as "The question in dispute between myself and my opponent is, which of the two is next-of-kin to the deceased who died intestate." Sometimes we may even couple contradictory propositions, as for instance "I say this, my opponent says that."

We may at times produce the effect of a proposition, even though it is not in itself a proposition, by adding after the statement of facts some phrase such as the following: "These are the points on which you will give your decision," thereby reminding the judge to give special attention to the question and giving him a fillip to emphasise the point that we have finished the statement of facts and are beginning the proof, so that when we start to verify our statements he may realise that he has reached a fresh stage where he must begin to listen with renewed attention.

V. Partition may be defined as the enumeration in order of our own propositions, those of our adversary or both. It is held by some that this is indispensable on the ground that it makes the case clearer and the judge more attentive and more ready to be instructed, if he knows what we are speaking about and what we are going subsequently to speak about. Others, on the contrary, think that such a course is dangerous to the speaker on two grounds, namely that sometimes we may forget to perform what we have promised and may, on the other hand, come upon something which we have omitted in the partition. But this will never happen to anyone unless he is either a fool or has come into court without thinking out his speech in detail beforehand. Besides, what can be simpler or clearer than a straightforward partition? It follows nature as a guide and the adhesion to a definite method is actually of the greatest assistance to the speaker's memory. Therefore I cannot approve the view even of those who lay down that partition should not extend beyond the length of three propositions. No doubt there is a danger, if our partition is too complicated, that it may slip the memory of the judge and disturb his attention. But that is no reason why it should be tied down to a definite number of propositions, since the case may quite conceivably require more. There are further reasons why we should sometimes dispense with partition. In the first place there are many points which can be produced in a more attractive manner, if they appear to be discovered on the spot and not to have been brought ready made from our study, but rather to have sprung from the requirements of the case itself while we were speaking. Thus we get those not unpleasing figures such as "It has almost escaped me," "I had forgotten," or "You do well to remind me." For if we set forth all that we propose to prove in advance, we shall deprive ourselves of the advantage springing from the charm of novelty. Sometimes we shall even have to hoodwink the judge and work upon him by various artifices so that he may think that our aim is other than what it really is. For there are cases when a proposition may be somewhat startling: if the judge foresees this, he will shrink from it in advance, like a patient who catches sight of the surgeon's knife before the operation. On the other hand, if we have given him no preliminary notice and our words take him unawares, without his interest in them having been previously roused by any warning, we shall gain a credence which we should not have secured had we stated that we were going to raise the point. At times we must not merely avoid distinguishing between the various questions, but must omit them altogether, while our audience must be distracted by appeals to the emotion and their attention diverted. For the duty of the orator is not merely to instruct : the power of eloquence is greatest in emotional appeals. Now there is no room for passion if we devote our attention to minute and microscopic division at a time when we are seeking to mislead the judgment of the person who is trying the case. Again, there are certain arguments which 7 are weak and trivial when they stand alone, but which have great force when produced in a body. We must, therefore, concentrate such arguments, and our tactics should be those of a sudden charge in mass. This, however, is a practice which should be resorted to but rarely and only under extreme necessity when reason compels us to take a course which is apparently irrational. In addition it must 8 be pointed out that in any partition there is always some one point of such special importance, that when the judge has heard it he is impatient with the remainder, which he regards as superfluous. Consequently if we have to prove or refute a number of points partition will be both useful and attractive, since it will indicate in order what we propose to say on each subject. On the other hand, if we are defending one point on various grounds, partition will be unnecessary. If you were to make a partition such 9 as the following, "I will not say that the character of my client is such as to render him incapable of murder, I will only say that he had no motive for murder and that at the time when the deceased was killed he was overseas," in that case all the proofs which you propose to bring before this, the final proof, must needs seem superfluous to the judge. For the judge is always in a hurry to reach the most 10 important point. If he has a patient disposition he will merely make a silent appeal to the advocate, whom he will treat as bound by his promise. On the other hand, if he is busy, or holds exalted position, or is intolerant by nature, he will insist in no very courteous manner on his coming to the point. For these reasons there are some who disapprove of 11 the partition adopted by Cicero in the pro Cluentio,¹ where he premises that he is going to show, first, "that no man was ever arraigned for greater crimes or on stronger evidence than Oppianicus," secondly, "that previous judgments had been passed by those very judges by whom he was condemned," and finally, "that Cluentius made no attempt to bribe the jury, but that his opponent did." They argue that if the third point can be proved, there is no 12 need to have urged the two preceding. On the other hand you will find no one so unreasonable or so foolish as to deny that the partition in the *pro Murena*² is admirable. "I understand, gentlemen, that the accusation falls into three parts, the first aspersing my client's character, the second dealing with his candidature for the magistracy, and the third with charges of bribery." These words make the case as clear as possible, and no one division renders any other superfluous.

There are also a number who are in doubt as to 13 a form of defence which I may exemplify as follows: "If I murdered him, I did right; but I did not murder him."³ What, they ask, is the value of the first part, if the second can be proved, since they are mutually inconsistent, and if anyone employs both arguments, we should believe neither? This contention is partially justified; we should employ the second alone only if the fact can be proved without a doubt. But if we have any doubts as to being able 14 to prove the stronger argument, we shall do well to rely on both. Different arguments move different people. He who thinks that the act was committed may regard it as a just act, while he who is deaf to the plea that the act was just may perhaps believe that it was never committed: one who is confident of his powers as a marksman may be content with one shaft, whereas he who has no such confidence will do well to launch several and give fortune a chance to come to his assistance. Cicero in the pro Milone 15 reveals the utmost skill in showing first that Clodius laid an ambush for Milo and then in adding as a supernumerary argument that, even if he had not done so, he was nevertheless so bad a citizen that his slaying could only have done credit to the patriotism of the slayer and redounded to his glory. I would not however entirely condemn the order 16 mentioned above,¹ since there are certain arguments which, though hard in themselves, may serve to soften those which come after. The proverb, "If you want to get your due, you must ask for something more,"² is not wholly unreasonable. Still no one 17 should interpret it to mean that you must stop short of nothing. For the Greeks are right when they lay it down as a rule that we should not attempt the impossible. But whenever the double-barrelled defence of which I am speaking is employed, we must aim at making the first argument support the credibility of the second. For he who might without danger to himself have confessed to the commission of the act, can have no motive for lying when he denies the commission.

¹ v. 11.³ See III. vi. 10.

Above all it is important, whenever we suspect 18
 that the judge desires a proof other than that on which we are engaged, to promise that we will satisfy him on the point fully and without delay, more especially if the question is one of our client's honour. But it will often happen that a discredit- 19 able case has the law on its side, and to prevent the judges giving us only a grudging and reluctant hearing on the point of law, we shall have to warn them with some frequency that we shall shortly proceed to defend our client's honour and integrity, if they will only wait a little and allow us to follow the order of our proofs. We may also at times 20 pretend to say certain things against the wishes of our clients, as Cicero ¹ does in the pro Cluentio when he discusses the law dealing with judicial corruption.
 Occasionally we may stop, as though interrupted by our clients, while often we shall address them and exhort them to let us act as we think best. Thus we shall make a gradual impression on the mind of the judge, and, buoyed up by the hope that we are going to clear our client's honour, he will be less ill-disposed toward the harder portions of our proof.
 And when he has accepted these, he will be all the 21
 readier to listen to our defence of our client's character. Thus the two points will render mutual assistance to each other; the judge will be more attentive to our legal proofs owing to his hope that we shall proceed to a vindication of character and better disposed to accept that vindication because we have proved our point of law.

But although partitio is neither always necessary 22
 nor useful, it will, if judiciously employed, greatly

¹ lii.

add to the lucidity and grace of our speech. For it not only makes our arguments clearer by isolating the points from the crowd in which they would otherwise be lost and placing them before the eyes of the judge, but relieves his attention by assigning a definite limit to certain parts of our speech, just as our fatigue upon a journey is relieved by reading the distances on the milestones which we pass. For it is a pleasure to be able to measure how much of our task has been accomplished, and the knowledge of what remains to do stimulates us to fresh effort over the labour that still awaits us. For nothing need seem long, when it is definitely known how far it is to the end. Quintus Hortensius deserves the high praise which has been awarded him for the care which he took over his partitions, although Cicero more than once indulges in kindly mockery of his habit of counting his headings on his fingers. For there is a limit to gesture, and we must be specially careful to avoid excessive minuteness and any suggestion of articulated structure in our partition. If our divisions are too small, they cease to be limbs and become fragments, and consequently detract not a little from the authority of our speech. Moreover, those who are ambitious of this sort of reputation, in order that they may appear to enhance the nicety and the exhaustive nature of their division, introduce what is superfluous and subdivide things which naturally form a single whole. The result of their labours is, however, not so much to increase the number of their divisions as to diminish their importance, and after all is done and they have split up their argument into a thousand tiny compartments, they fall into that very obscurity which the partition was designed to eliminate.

BOOK IV. v. 26-28

The proposition, whether single or multiple, must, 26
on every occasion when it can be employed with profit, be clear and lucid; for what could be more discreditable than that a portion of the speech, whose sole purpose is to prevent obscurity elsewhere, should itself be obscure? Secondly it must be brief and must not be burdened with a single superfluous word; for we are not explaining what we are saying, but what we are going to say. We 27 must also ensure that it is free alike from omissions and from redundancy. Redundance as a rule occurs through our dividing into species when it would be sufficient to divide into genera, or through the addi- 28 tion of species after stating the genus. The following will serve as an example: "I will speak of virtue, justice and abstinence." But justice and abstinence are species of the genus virtue. Our first partition 28 will be between admitted and disputed facts.
Admitted facts will then be divided into those acknowledged by our opponent and those acknowledged by ourselves. Disputed facts will be divided into those which we and those which our opponents allege. But the worst fault of all is to treat your points in an order different from that which was assigned them in your proposition.

BOOK V

PREFACE

THERE have been certain writers of no small authority¹ who have held that the sole duty of the orator was to instruct : in their view, appeals to the emotions were to be excluded for two reasons, first on the ground that all disturbance of the mind was a fault, and secondly that it was wrong to distract the judge from the truth by exciting his pity, bringing influence to bear, and the like. Further, to seek to charm the audience, when the aim of the orator was merely to win success, was in their opinion not only superfluous for a pleader, but hardly worthy of a self-respecting man. The majority however, while admitting that such arts undoubtedly formed part of oratory, held that its special and peculiar task is to make good the case which it maintains and refute that of its opponent. Whichever of these views is correct (for at this point I do not propose to express my own opinion), they will regard this book as serving a very necessary purpose, since it will deal entirely with the points on which they lay such stress, although all that I have already said on the subject of judicial causes is subservient to the same end. For the purpose of the exordium and the statement of facts is merely to prepare the judge for these points, while it would be a work of supererogation to know the *bases*² of cases or to consider the other points dealt with above,¹ unless we intend to proceed to the consideration of the proof. Finally, of the five parts² into which we divided judicial cases, any single one other than the proof may on occasion be dispensed with. But there can be no suit in which the proof is not absolutely necessary. With regard to the rules to be observed in this connexion, we shall, I think, be wisest to follow our previous method of classification and show first what is common to all cases and then proceed to point out those which are peculiar to the several kinds of cases. 5

2
3
4

I. To begin with it may be noted that the division laid down by Aristotle³ has met with almost universal approval. It is to the effect that there are some proofs adopted by the orator which lie outside the art of speaking, and others which he himself deduces or, if I may use the term, begets out of his case. The former therefore have been styled ἀτεχνοί or inartificial proofs, the latter ἐτεχνοί or artificial. To the first class belong decisions of previous courts, 2 rumours, evidence extracted by torture, documents, oaths, and witnesses, for it is with these that the majority of forensic arguments are concerned. But though in themselves they involve no art, all the powers of eloquence are as a rule required to disparage or refute them. Consequently in my opinion those who would eliminate the whole of this class of proof from their rules of oratory, deserve the strongest condemnation. It is not, however, my intention to 3 embrace all that can be said for or against these views. I do not for instance propose to lay down rules for commonplaces, a task requiring infinite detail, but merely to sketch out the general lines and method to be followed by the orator. The method once indicated, it is for the individual orator not merely to employ his powers on its application, but on the invention of similar methods as the circumstances of the case may demand. For it is impossible to deal with every kind of case, even if we confine ourselves to those which have actually occurred in the past without considering those which may occur in the future.

II. As regards decisions in previous courts, these fall under three heads. First, we have matters on which judgment has been given at some time or other in cases of a similar nature: these are, however, more correctly termed precedents, as for instance where a father's will has been annulled or confirmed in opposition to his sons. Secondly, there are judgments concerned with the case itself; it is from these that the name praeiudicium is derived: as examples I may cite those passed against Oppianicus¹ or by the senate against Milo.² Thirdly, there are judgments passed on the actual case, as for example in cases where the accused has been deported,³ or where renewed application is made for the recognition of an individual as a free man,⁴ or in portions of cases tried in the centumviral court which come before two different panels of judges.⁵ Such previous decisions are as a rule ² confirmed in two ways: by the authority of those who gave the decision and by the likeness between the two cases. As for their reversal, this can rarely be obtained by denouncing the judges, unless they have been guilty of obvious error. For each of those who are trying the case wishes the decision given by another to stand, since he too has to give judgment and is reluctant to create a precedent that may recoil upon himself. Consequently, as regards the 3 first two classes, we must, if possible, take refuge in some dissimilarity between the two cases, and two cases are scarcely ever alike in all their details. If, however, such a course is impossible and the case is the same as that on which the previous decision was given, we must complain of the negligence shown in the conduct of the previous case or of the weakness of the parties condemned, or of undue influence employed to corrupt the witnesses, or again of popular prejudice or ignorance which reacted unfavourably against our client; or else we must consider what has occurred since to alter the aspect of the case. If none of these courses 4 can be adopted, it will still be possible to point out that the peculiar circumstances of many trials have led to unjust decisions; hence condemnations such as that of Rutilius¹ and acquittals such as those of Clodius and Catiline. We must also ask the judges to consider the facts of the case on their merits rather than make their verdict the inevitable consequence of a verdict given by others. When, how- 5 ever, we are confronted by decrees of the senate, or ordinances of emperors or magistrates, there is no remedy, unless we can make out that there is some difference, however small, between the cases, or that the same persons or persons holding the same powers have made some subsequent enactment reversing the former decision. Failing this, there will be no case for judgment.

⁵ The meaning is not clear. The Latin suggests that portions of a case might be tried by two panels sitting separately, while the case as a whole was tried by the two panels sitting conjointly. The hasta (spear) was the symbol of the centumviral court. cp. XI. i. 78.

III. With regard to rumour and common report, one party will call them the verdict of public opinion and the testimony of the world at large; the other will describe them as vague talk based on no sure authority, to which malignity has given birth and credulity increase, an ill to which even the most innocent of men may be exposed by the deliberate dissemination of falsehood on the part of their enemies. It will be easy for both parties to produce precedents to support their arguments.

IV. A like situation arises in the case of evidence extracted by torture: one party will style torture an infallible method of discovering the truth, while the other will allege that it also often results in false confessions, since with some their capacity of endurance makes lying an easy thing, while with others weakness makes it a necessity. It is hardly worth my while to say more on the subject, as the speeches both of ancient and modern orators are full of this topic. Individual cases may however involve special 2 considerations in this connexion. For if the point at issue is whether torture should be applied, it will make all the difference who it is who demands or offers it, who it is that is to be subjected to torture, against whom the evidence thus sought will tell, and what is the motive for the demand. If on the other hand torture has already been applied, it will make all the difference who was in charge of the proceedings, who was the victim and what the nature of the torture, whether the confession was credible or consistent, whether the witness stuck to his first statement or changed it under the influence of pain, and whether he made it at the beginning of the torture or only after it had continued some time. The variety of such questions is as infinite as the variety of actual cases.

V. It is also frequently necessary to speak against documents, for it is common knowledge that they are often not merely rebutted, but even attacked as forgeries. But as this implies either fraud or ignorance on the part of the signatories, it is safer and easier to make the charge one of ignorance, because by so doing we reduce the number of the persons accused. But our proceedings as a whole will draw their arguments from the circumstances of the case at issue. For example, it may be incredible that an incident occurred as stated in the documents, or, as more often happens, the evidence of the documents may be overthrown by other proofs which are likewise of an inartificial nature; if, for example, it is alleged that the person, whose interests are prejudiced by the document, or one of the signatories was absent when the document was signed, or deceased before its signature, or if the dates disagree, or events preceding or following the writing of the document are inconsistent with it. Even a simple inspection of a document is often sufficient for the detection of forgery.

VI. With regard to oaths,¹ parties either offer to take an oath themselves, or refuse to accept the oath of their opponent, demand that their opponent should take an oath or refuse to comply with a similar demand when proffered to themselves. To offer to take an oath unconditionally without demanding that one's opponent should likewise take an oath is as a rule a sign of bad faith. If, however,² anyone should take this course, he will defend his action by appealing to the blamelessness of his life as rendering perjury on his part incredible, or by the solemn nature of the oath, with regard to which he will win all the greater credence, if without the least show of eagerness to take the oath he makes it clear that he does not shrink from so solemn a duty. Or again, if the case is such as to make this possible, he will rely on the trivial nature of the point in dispute to win belief, on the ground that he would not incur the risk of the divine displeasure when so little is at stake. Or, finally, he may in addition to the other means which he employs to win his case offer to take an oath as a culminating proof of a clear conscience. The man who refuses to accept his 3 opponent's offer to take an oath, will allege that the inequality of their respective conditions are not the same for both parties and will point out that many persons are not in the least afraid of committing perjury, even philosophers having been found to deny that the gods intervene in human affairs; and further that he who is ready to take an oath without being asked to do so, is really proposing to pass sentence on his own case and to show what an easy and trivial thing he thinks the oath which he offers to take. On the other hand the man who proposes to put 4 his opponent on oath appears to act with moderation, since he is making his adversary a judge in his own case, while he frees the actual judge from the burden of coming to a decision, since the latter would assuredly prefer to rest on another man's oath than on his own. This fact makes the refusal to take an 5 oath all the more difficult, unless indeed the affair in question be of such a nature that it cannot be supposed that the facts are known to the person asked to take the oath. Failing this excuse, there is only one course open to him: he must say that his opponent is trying to excite a prejudice against him and is endeavouring to give the impression that he has real ground for complaint though he is not in a position to win his case; consequently, though a dishonest man would eagerly have availed himself of the proposal, he prefers to prove the truth of his statements rather than leave a doubt in anyone's mind as to whether he has committed perjury or no. But in my young days advocates grown old in pleading used to lay it down as a rule that we should never be in a hurry to propose that our opponent should take an oath, just as we should never allow him the choice of a judge¹ nor select our judge from among the supporters of the opposite side: for if it is regarded as a disgrace to such a supporter² to say anything against his client, it is surely a still worse disgrace that he should do anything that will harm his client's case.

VII. It is, however, the evidence that gives the greatest trouble to advocates. Evidence may be given either in writing or orally by witnesses present in court. Documentary evidence is easier to dispose of. For it is likely that the deponent was less ashamed of himself in the presence of a small number of witnesses, and his absence from court is attacked as indicating a lack of confidence. If we cannot call the character of the deponent in question, we may attack the witnesses to his signature. Further there is always a certain tacit prejudice² against documentary evidence, since no one can be forced to give such evidence save of his own free will, whereby he shows that he harbours unfriendly feelings towards the person against whom he bears witness. On the other hand an advocate should be chary of denying that a friend may give true evidence against a friend or an enemy against an enemy, provided they are persons of unimpeachable credit. But the subject admits of copious discussion, from whichever side it be regarded.

The task of dealing with the evidence of witnesses³ present in court is, however, one of great difficulty, and consequently whether defending or impugning them the orator employs a twofold armoury in the shape of a set speech and examination.¹ In set speeches it is usual to begin with observations either on behalf of or against witnesses in general. In so⁴ doing we introduce a commonplace, since one side will contend that there can be no stronger proof than that which rests on human knowledge, while the other, in order to detract from their credibility, will enumerate all the methods by which false evidence is usually given. The next procedure is the common⁵ practice of making a special attack, which all the same involves impugning the validity of evidence given by large numbers of persons. We know, for instance, that the evidence of entire nations² and whole classes of evidence have been disposed of by advocates. For example, in the case of hearsay evidence, it will be urged that those who produce such evidence are not really witnesses, but are merely reporting the words of unsworn persons, while in cases of extortion, those who swear that they paid certain sums to the accused are to be regarded not as witnesses, but as parties to the suit. Sometimes⁶ however the advocate will direct his speech against single individuals. Such a form of attack may be found in many speeches, sometimes embedded in the speech for the defence and sometimes published separately like the speech against the evidence of Vatinius.¹ The whole subject, therefore, demands a 7 thorough investigation, as the task which we have in hand is the complete education of an orator. Otherwise the two books written on this subject by Domitius Afer would suffice. I attended his lectures when he was old and I was young, and consequently have the advantage not merely of having read his book, but of having heard most of his views from his own lips. He very justly lays down the rule that in this connexion it is the first duty of an orator to make himself thoroughly acquainted with the case, a remark which of course applies to all portions of a speech. How such knowledge may be acquired I 8 shall explain when I come to the appropriate portion of this work.² This knowledge will suggest material for the examination and will supply weapons ready to the speaker's hand: it will also indicate to him the points for which the judge's mind must be prepared in the set speech. For it is by the set speech that the credit of witnesses should be established or demolished, since the effect of evidence on the individual judge depends on the extent to which he has been previously influenced in the direction of believing the witness or the reverse.

And since there are two classes of witnesses,³ 9 those who testify of their own free will and those who are summoned to attend in the public courts, of whom the former are available to either party, the latter solely to the accusers, we must distinguish between the duties of the advocate who produces witnesses and the advocate who refutes them.

He who produces a voluntary witness is in a 10

position to know what he is likely to say : consequently the task of examining him would seem to be rendered easier. But even here such cases make, a great demand on the acumen and watchfulness of the advocate, who must see that his witness is neither timid, inconsistent nor imprudent. For the opposing 11 counsel have a way of making a witness lose his head or of leading him into some trap; and once a witness trips, he does more harm to his own side than he would have done good, had he retained his composure and presence of mind. The advocate must therefore put his witnesses through their paces thoroughly in private before they appear in court and must test them by a variety of questions such as may well be put to them by his opponent. The result will be that they will not contradict themselves or, if they do make some slip, can be set upon their feet again by a timely question from the advocate who produces them. Still, even in the case 12 of witnesses whose evidence is consistent, we must be on our guard against treachery. For such witnesses are often put up by one's opponent and, after promising to say everything that will help our case, give answers of exactly the opposite character and carry more weight by the admission of facts which tell against us than they would have done had they disproved them. We must therefore discover 13 what motives they have for doing our opponent a hurt, and the fact that they were once his enemies will not suffice our purpose : we must find out whether they have ceased to be ill-disposed to him or whether they desire by means of their evidence to effect a reconciliation with him, in order to assure ourselves that they have not been bribed or repented of their previous attitude and changed their purpose. Such precautions are necessary even with witnesses who know that what they propose to say is true; but it is still more necessary with those who promise to give false evidence. For experience shows that 14 they are more likely to repent of their purpose, their promises are less to be relied on, and, if they do keep their promise, their evidence is easier to refute.

Witnesses appearing in answer to a subpoena may 15 be divided into two classes: those who desire to harm the accused, and those who do not. The accuser sometimes is aware of their disposition, sometimes unaware. For the moment let us assume that he is aware of their disposition, although I must point out that in either case the utmost skill is required in their examination. For if an advocate is 16 producing a witness who is desirous of harming the accused, he must avoid letting this desire become apparent, and must not at once proceed to question him on the point at issue. On the contrary this point must be approached by a circuitous route in such a manner as to make it seem that the statement which the witness is really desirous of making has been forced from him. Again he should not press the witness too much, for fear he should impair his credit by the glibness with which he answers every question, but should draw from him just so much as may seem reasonable to elicit from a single witness. On the other hand in the case of a witness 17 who is reluctant to tell the truth, the essential for successful examination is to extort the truth against his will. This can only be done by putting questions which have all the appearance of irrelevance. If this be done, he will give replies which he thinks can do no harm to the party which he favours, and subsequently will be led on from the admissions which he has made to a position which renders it impossible for him to deny the truth of the facts which he is reluctant to state. For just as 18 in a set speech we usually collect detached arguments which in themselves seem innocuous to the accused, but taken together prove the case against him, so we must ask the reluctant witness a number of questions relative to acts antecedent or subsequent to the case, places, dates, persons, etcetera, with a view to luring him into some reply which will force him to make the admissions which we desire or to contradict his previous evidence. If this fails, we 19 must content ourselves with making it clear that he is reluctant to tell what he knows, and lead him with a view to tripping him up on some point or other, even though it be irrelevant to the case; we must also keep him in the witness-box for an unusual length of time, so that by saying everything that can be said and more than is necessary on behalf of the accused, he may be rendered suspect to the judge. Thus he will do the accused no less harm than if he had told the truth against him. But if (to proceed to 20 our second supposition) the advocate does not know what the intentions of the witness may be, he must advance gradually inch by inch and sound him by examination and lead him step by step to the particular reply which it is desired to elicit. But since 21 these witnesses are sometimes so artful that their first replies are designed to meet the wishes of the questioner, in order to win all the greater credit when subsequently they answer in a very different way, it will be the duty of the advocate to dismiss a suspect witness while he can still do so with advantage.

In the case of advocates for the defence examination is in some respects easier, in some more difficult. It is more difficult because it is rarely possible for them to have any previous knowledge of what the witness is likely to say, and easier because, when they come to cross-examine, they know what he has already said. Consequently in view of the uncertainty involved, there is need for careful inquiry with a view to discovering the character of the witness against the accused and what are his motives for hostility and what its extent: and all such points about the witness should be set forth in advance and disposed of, whether we desire to represent the evidence against the accused as instigated by hatred, envy, bribery or influence. Further, if our opponents bring forward only a small number of witnesses, we must attack them on that head; if on the other hand they produce an excessive number, we must accuse them of conspiracy: if the witnesses are persons of inconspicuous rank, we must minimise their importance, while if they are powerful, we shall accuse our adversaries of bringing undue influence to bear. It will, however, be still more helpful if we expose the motives which they have for desiring to injure the accused, and these will vary according to the nature of the case and the parties concerned. For the other lines of argument mentioned above are often answered by the employment of common-places on similar lines, since the prosecutor, if he produce but few witnesses of inconspicuous rank, can parade the simple honesty of his methods on the ground that he has produced none save those who are in a position to know the real facts, while if he produce a number of distinguished witnesses, it is even easier to commend them to the court. But at 25 times, just as we have to praise individual witnesses, so we may have to demolish them, whether their evidence has been given in documentary form or they have been summoned to appear in person. This was easier and of more frequent occurrence in the days when the examination of the witnesses was not deferred till after the conclusion of the pleading.¹ With regard to what we should say against individual witnesses, no general rules can be laid down: it will depend on the personality of the witness.

It remains to consider the technique to be followed 26 in the examination of witnesses. The first essential is to know your witness. For a timid witness may be terrorised, a fool outwitted, an irascible man provoked, and vanity flattered. The shrewd and self-possessed witness, on the other hand, must be dismissed at once as being malicious and obstinate; or refuted, not by cross-examination, but by a brief speech from the counsel for the defence; or may be put out of countenance by some jest, if a favourable opportunity presents itself; or, if his past life admits of criticism, his credit may be overthrown by the scandalous charges which can be brought against him. It has been found advantageous at times when con- 27 fronted with an honest and respectable witness to refrain from pressing him hard, since it is often the case that those who would have defended themselves manfully against attack are mollified by courtesy. But every question is either concerned with the case itself or with something outside the case. As regards the first type of question counsel for the defence may, by adopting a method which I have already recommended for the prosecutor,¹ namely by commencing his examination with questions of an apparently irrelevant and innocent character and then by comparing previous with subsequent replies, frequently lead witnesses into such a position that it becomes possible to extort useful admissions from them against their will. The schools, it is true, give 28 no instruction either as to theory or practice in this subject, and skill in examination comes rather from natural talent or practice. If, however, I am asked to point out a model for imitation, I can recommend but one, namely that which may be found in the dialogues of the Socratics and more especially of Plato, in which the questions put are so shrewd that although individually as a rule the answers are perfectly satisfactory to the other side, yet the questioner reaches the conclusion at which he is aiming. Fortune sometimes is so kind that a 29 witness gives an answer involving some inconsistency, while at times (and this is a more frequent occurrence) one witness contradicts another. But acute examination methodically conducted will generally reach the same result which is so often reached by chance. There are also a number of points strictly irrelevant 30 to the case on which questions may be put with advantage. We may for example ask questions about the past life of other witnesses or about the witness' own character, with a view to discovering whether they can be charged with some disgraceful conduct, or degrading occupation, with friendship with the prosecutor or hostility toward the accused, since in replying to such questions they may say something which will help our cause or may be convicted of falsehood or of a desire to injure the accused. But above all our examination must be circumspect, 31 since a witness will often launch some smart repartee in answering counsel for the defence and thereby win marked favour from the audience in general. Secondly, we must put our questions as far as possible in the language of everyday speech that the witness, who is often an uneducated man, may understand our meaning, or at any rate may have no opportunity of saying that he does not know what we mean, a statement which is apt to prove highly disconcerting to the examiner. I must however express the 32 strongest disapproval of the practice of sending a suborned witness to sit on the benches of the opposing party, in order that on being called into the witness-box from that quarter he may thereby do all the more damage to the case for the accused by speaking against the party with whose adherents he was sitting or, while appearing to help him by his testimony, deliberately giving his evidence in such an extravagant and exaggerated manner, as not only to detract from the credibility of his own statements, but to annul the advantage derived from the evidence of those who were really helpful. I mention this practice not with a view to encourage it, but to secure its avoidance.

Documentary evidence is not frequently in conflict with oral. Such a circumstance may be turned to advantage by either side. For one party will rest its case on the fact that the witness is speaking on oath, the other on the unanimity of the signatories.¹ Again there is often a conflict between the evidence 33 and the arguments. One party will argue that the witnesses know the facts and are bound by the sanctity of their oath, while the arguments are nought but ingenious juggling with the facts. The other party will argue that witnesses are procured by influence, fear, money, anger, hatred, friendship, or bribery, whereas arguments are drawn from nature; in giving his assent to the latter the judge is believing the voice of his own reason, in accepting the former he is giving credence to another. Such 34 problems are common to a number of cases, and are and will always be the subject of vehement debate. Sometimes there are witnesses on both sides and the question arises with regard to themselves as to which are the more respectable in character, or with regard to the case, which have given the more credible evidence, with regard to the parties to the case, which has brought the greater influence to bear on the witnesses. If to this kind of evidence anyone should 35 wish to add evidence of the sort known as supernatural, based on oracles, prophecies and omens, I would remind him that there are two ways in which these may be treated. There is the general method, with regard to which there is an endless dispute between the adherents of the Stoics and the Epicureans, as to whether the world is governed by providence. The other is special and is concerned with particular departments of the art of divination, according as they may happen to affect the question at issue. For the credibility of oracles may be established 36 or destroyed in one way, and that of soothsayers, augurs, diviners and astrologers in another, since the two classes differ entirely in nature. Again the task of establishing or demolishing such evidence as the following will give the orator plenty to do; as for example if certain words have been uttered under the influence of wine, in sleep or in a fit of madness, or if information has been picked up from the mouths of children, whom the one party will assert to be incapable of invention, while the other will assert that they do not know what they are saying. The following method may not merely be used with great effect, but may even be badly missed when it is not employed. You gave me the money. Who counted it out? Where did this occur and from what source did the money come? You accuse me of poisoning. Where did I buy the poison and from whom? What did I pay for it and whom did I employ to administer it? Who was my accomplice? Practically all these points are discussed by Cicero in dealing with the charge of poisoning in the pro Cluentio.¹ This concludes my observations upon inartificial proofs. I have stated them as briefly as I could.

VIII. The second^{artificial} class of proofs are wholly the work of art and consist of matters specially adapted to produce belief. They are, however, as a rule almost entirely neglected or only very lightly touched on by those who, avoiding arguments as rugged and repulsive things, confine themselves to pleasanter regions and, like those who, as poets tell, were bewitched by tasting a magic herb in the land of the Lotus-eaters or by the song of the Sirens into preferring pleasure to safety, follow the empty semblance of renown and are robbed of that victory which is the aim of eloquence. And yet those other forms of eloquence, which have a more continuous sweep and flow, are employed with a view to assisting and embellishing the arguments and produce the appearance of superinducing a body upon the sinews, on which the whole case rests; thus if it is asserted that some act has been committed under the influence of anger, fear or desire, we may expatiate at some length on the nature of each of these passions. It is by these same methods that we praise, accuse, exaggerate, attenuate, describe, deter, complain, console or exhort. But such rhetorical devices may be employed in connexion with matters about which there is no doubt or at least which we speak of as admitted facts. Nor would I deny that there is some advantage to be gained by pleasing our audience and a great deal by stirring their emotions. Still, all these devices are more effective, when the judge thinks he has gained a full knowledge of the facts of the case, which we can only give him by argument and by the employment of every other known means of proof.

Before, however, I proceed to classify the various species of artificial proof, I must point out that there are certain features common to all kinds of proof. For there is no question which is not concerned either with things or persons, nor can there be any ground for argument save in connexion with matters concerning things or persons, which may be considered either by themselves or with reference to something else ; while there can be no proof except such as is derived from things consequent or things opposite, which must be sought for either in the time preceding, contemporaneous with or subsequent to the alleged fact, nor can any single thing be proved save by reference to something else which must be greater, less than or equal to it. As regards arguments, they may be found either in the questions raised by the case, which may be considered by themselves quite apart from any connexion with individual things or persons, or in the case itself, when anything is discovered in it which cannot be arrived at by the light of common reason, but is peculiar to the subject on which judgment has to be given. Further, all proofs fall into three classes, necessary, credible, and not impossible. Again there are four forms of proof. First, we may argue that, because one thing is, another thing is not; as It is day and therefore not night. Secondly, we may argue that, because one thing is, another thing is; as The sun is risen, therefore it is day. Thirdly, it may be argued that because one thing is not, another thing is; as It is not night, therefore it is day. Finally, it may be argued that, because one thing is not, another thing is not; as He is not a reasoning being, therefore he is not a man. These general remarks will suffice by way of introduction and I will now proceed to details.

IX. Every artificial proof consists either of indications, arguments or examples. I am well aware that many consider indications to form part of the arguments. My reasons for distinguishing them are twofold. In the first place indications as a rule come under the head of inartificial proofs: for a blood-stained garment, a shriek, a dark blotch and the like are all evidence analogous to documentary or oral evidence and rumours; they are not discovered by the orator, but are given him with the case itself. My second reason was that indications, if indubitable, are not arguments, since they leave no room for question, while arguments are only possible in controversial matters. If on the other hand they are doubtful, they are not arguments, but require arguments to support them.

The two first species into which artificial proofs 3

may be divided are, as I have already said, those which involve a conclusion and those which do not. The former are those which cannot be otherwise and are called τεκμήρια by the Greeks, because they are indications from which there is no getting away. These however seem to me scarcely to come under the rules of art. For where an indication is irrefutable, there can be no dispute as to facts. This 4 happens whenever there can be no doubt that something is being or has been done, or when it is impossible for it to be or have been done. In such cases there can be no dispute as to the fact. This kind of proof may be considered in connexion with past, present or future time. For example, a woman who is 5 delivered of a child must have had intercourse with a man, and the reference is to the past. When there is a high wind at sea, there must be waves, and the reference is to the present. When a man has received a wound in the heart, he is bound to die, and the reference is to the future. Nor again can there be a harvest where no seed has been sown, nor can a man be at Rome when he is at Athens, nor have been wounded by a sword when he has no scar. Some have the same force when reversed: a man 6 who breathes is alive, and a man who is alive breathes. Some again cannot be reversed: because he who walks moves it does not follow that he who moves walks. So too a woman, who has not been delivered 7 of a child, may have had intercourse with a man, there may be waves without a high wind, and a man may die without having received a wound in the heart. Similarly seed may be sown without a harvest resulting, a man, who was never at Athens, may never have been at Rome, and a man who has a scar may not have received a sword-wound.

There are other indications or εἰκότα, that is 8 probabilities, as the Greeks call them, which do not involve a necessary conclusion. These may not be sufficient in themselves to remove doubt, but may yet be of the greatest value when taken in conjunction with other indications. The Latin 9 equivalent of the Greek σημείον is signum, a sign, though some have called it indicium, an indication, or vestigium, a trace. Such signs or indications enable us to infer that something else has happened; blood for instance may lead us to infer that a murder has taken place. But bloodstains on a garment may be the result of the slaying of a victim at a sacrifice or of bleeding at the nose. Everyone who has a bloodstain on his clothes is not necessarily a murderer. But although such an indication, 10 may not amount to proof in itself, yet it may be produced as evidence in conjunction with other indications, such for instance as the fact that the man with the bloodstain was the enemy of the murdered man, had threatened him previously or was in the same place with him. Add the indication in question to these, and what was previously only a suspicion may become a certainty. On the other 11 hand there are indications which may be made to serve either party, such as livid spots, swellings which may be regarded as symptoms either of poisoning or of bad health, or a wound in the breast which may be treated as a proof of murder or of suicide. The force of such indications depends on the amount of extraneous support which they receive.

Hermagoras would include among such indica- 12 tions as do not involve a necessary conclusion, an argument such as the following, "Atalanta cannot be a virgin, as she has been roaming the woods in the company of young men." If we accept this view, I fear that we shall come to treat all inferences from a fact as indications. None the less such arguments are in practice treated exactly as if they were indications. Nor do the Areopagites, when they 13 condemned a boy for plucking out the eyes of quails, seem to have had anything else in their mind than the consideration that such conduct was an indication of a perverted character which might prove hurtful to many, if he had been allowed to grow up. So, too, the popularity of Spurius Maelius and Marcus Manlius was regarded as an indication that they were aiming at supreme power. However, I fear that this line of reasoning 14 will carry us too far. For if it is an indication of adultery that a woman bathes with men, the fact that she revels with young men or even an intimate friendship will also be indications of the same offence. Again depilation, a voluptuous gait, or womanish attire may be regarded as indications of effeminacy and unmanliness by anyone who thinks that such symptoms are the result of an immoral character, just as blood is the result of a wound: for anything, that springs from the matter under investigation and comes to our notice, may properly be called an indication. Similarly it is also usual 15 to give the names of signs to frequently observed phenomena, such as prognostics of the weather which we may illustrate by the Vergilian

"For wind turns Phoebe's face to ruddy gold" ¹

and

"The crow

With full voice, good-for-naught, invites the rain." ²

If these phenomena are caused by the state of the atmosphere, such an appellation is correct enough. For if the moon turns red owing to the wind, her hue is certainly a sign of wind. And if, as the same poet infers,¹ the condensation and rarification of the atmosphere causes that "concert of bird-voices" of which he speaks, we may agree in regarding it as a sign. We may further note that great things are sometimes indicated by trivial signs, witness the Vergilian crow; that trivial events should be indicated by signs of greater importance is of course no matter for wonder.

X. I now turn to arguments, the name under which we comprise the ἐνθυμήματα, ἐπιχειρήματα, and ἀποδείξεις of the Greeks, terms which, in spite of their difference, have much the same meaning. For the enthymeme (which we translate by commentum or commentatio, there being no alternative, though we should be wiser to use the Greek name) has three meanings: firstly it means anything conceived in the mind (this is not however the sense of which I am now speaking); secondly it signifies a proposition with a reason, and thirdly a conclusion of an argument drawn either from denial of consequents or from incompatibles²; although there is some controversy on this point. For there are some who style a conclusion from consequents an epicheireme, while it will be found that the majority hold the view that an enthymeme is a conclusion from incompatibles³: wherefore Cornificius styles it a contrarium or argument from contraries. Some again call it a rhetorical syllogism, others an incomplete syllogism, because its parts are not so clearly defined or of the same number as those of the regular syllogism, since such precision is not specially required by the orator. Valgius¹ translates ἐπιχείρημα by aggressio, that is 4 an attempt. It would however, in my opinion, be truer to say that it is not our handling of the subject, but the thing itself which we attempt which should be called an ἐπιχείρημα, that is to say the argument by which we try to prove something and which, even if it has not yet been stated in so many words, has been clearly conceived by the mind. Others regard it not as an attempted or imperfect 5 proof, but a complete proof, falling under the most special² species of proof; consequently, according to its proper and most generally received appellation it must be understood in the sense of a definite conception of some thought consisting of at least three parts.³ Some call an ἐπιχείρημα a reason, but Cicero⁴ 6 is more correct in calling it a reasoning, although he too seems to derive this name from the syllogism rather than anything else; for he calls the *syllogistic basis*⁵ a ratiocinative basis and quotes philosophers to support him. And since there is a certain kinship between a syllogism and an epicheireme, it may be thought that he was justified in his use of the latter term. An ἀπόδειξις is a clear proof; hence 7 the use of the term γραμμικαὶ ἀποδείξεις, "linear demonstrations"⁶ by the geometers. Caecilius holds that it differs from the epicheireme solely in the kind of conclusion arrived at and that an apodeixis is simply an incomplete epicheireme for the same reason that we said an enthymeme differed from a syllogism. For an epicheireme is also part of a syllogism. Some think that an apodeixis is portion of an epicheireme, namely the part containing the proof. But all 8 authorities, however much they may differ on other points, define both in the same way, in so far as they call both a method of proving what is not certain by means of what is certain. Indeed this is the nature of all arguments, for what is certain cannot be proved by what is uncertain. To all these forms of argument the Greeks give the name of πίστις, a term which, though the literal translation is fides "a warrant of credibility," is best translated by probatio

¹ de Inv. I. xxxi. 34.⁵ See III. vi. 43, 46, 51.⁶ See I. x. 38.

 "proof." But argument has several other meanings. 9
 For the plots of plays composed for acting in the theatre are called arguments, while Pedianus, when explaining the themes of the speeches of Cicero, says The argument is as follows. Cicero¹ himself in writing to Brutus says, Fearing that I might transfer something from that source to my Calo, although the argument is quite different. It is thus clear that all subjects for writing are so called. Nor is this to be 10 wondered at, since the term is also in common use among artists; hence the Vergilian phrase A mighty argument.² Again a work which deals with a number of different themes is called "rich in argument."
 But the sense with which we are now concerned is that which provides proof. Celsus indeed treats
 the terms, proof, indication, credibility, attempt, simply as different names for the same things, in which, to my thinking, he betrays a certain confusion of thought. For proof and credibility are not 11 merely the result of logical processes, but may equally be secured by inartificial arguments. Now
 I have already³ distinguished signs or, as he prefers to call them, indications from arguments. Consequently, since an argument is a process of reasoning

which provides proof and enables one thing to be inferred from another and confirms facts which are uncertain by reference to facts which are certain, there must needs be something in every case which requires no proof. Otherwise there will be nothing 12 by which we can prove anything; there must be something which either is or is believed to be true, by means of which doubtful things may be rendered credible. We may regard as certainties, first, those things which we perceive by the senses, things for instance that we hear or see, such as signs or indications; secondly, those things about which there is general agreement, such as the existence of the gods or the duty of loving one's parents; thirdly, those 13 things which are established by law or have passed into current usage, if not throughout the whole world, at any rate in the nation or state where the case is being pleaded—there are for instance many rights which rest not on law, but on custom; finally, there are the things which are admitted by either party, and whatever has already been proved or is not disputed by our adversary. Thus for instance it 14 may be argued that since the world is governed by providence, the state should similarly be governed by some controlling power: it follows that the state must be so governed, once it is clear that the world is governed by providence. Further, the man who is 15 to handle arguments correctly must know the nature and meaning of everything and their usual effects. For it is thus that we arrive at probable arguments or εἰκότα as the Greeks call them. With regard to 16 credibility there are three degrees. First, the highest, based on what usually happens, as for instance the assumption that children are loved by their parents. Secondly, there is the highly probable, as for instance the assumption that a man in the enjoyment of good health will probably live till to-morrow. The third degree is found where there is nothing absolutely against an assumption, such as that a theft committed in a house was the work of one of the household. Consequently 17 Aristotle in the second book of his *Rhetoric*¹ has made a careful examination of all that commonly happens to things and persons, and what things and persons are naturally adverse or friendly to other things or persons, as for instance, what is the natural result of wealth or ambition or superstition, what meets with the approval of good men, what is the object of a soldier's or a farmer's desires, and by what means everything is sought or shunned. For 18 my part I do not propose to pursue this subject. It is not merely a long, but an impossible or rather an infinite task; moreover it is within the compass of the common understanding of mankind. If, however, anyone wishes to pursue the subject, I have indicated where he may apply. But all credibility, 19 and it is with credibility that the great majority of arguments are concerned, turns on questions such as the following: whether it is credible that a father has been killed by his son, or that a father has committed incest with his daughter, or to take questions of an opposite character, whether it is credible that a stepmother has poisoned her stepchild, or that a man of luxurious life has committed adultery; or again whether a crime has been openly committed, or false evidence given for a small bribe, since each of these crimes is the result of a special cast of character as a rule, though not always; if it were always so, there would be no room for doubt, and no argument.

Let us now turn to consider the "places" of arguments, although some hold that they are identical with the topics which I have already discussed above.¹ But I do not use this term in its usual acceptance, namely, commonplaces² directed against luxury, adultery, and the like, but in the sense of the secret places where arguments reside, and from which they must be drawn forth. For just as all kinds of produce are not provided by every country, and as you will not succeed in finding a particular bird or beast, if you are ignorant of the localities where it has its usual haunts or birthplace, as even the various kinds of fish flourish in different surroundings, some preferring a smooth and others a rocky bottom, and are found on different shores and in divers regions (you will for instance never catch a sturgeon or wrasse in Italian waters), so not every kind of argument can be derived from every circumstance, and consequently our search requires discrimination. Otherwise we shall fall into serious error, and after wasting our labour through lack of method we shall fail to discover the argument which we desire, unless assisted by some happy chance. But if we know the circumstances which give rise to each kind of argument, we shall easily see, when we come to a particular "place," what arguments it contains.

Firstly, then, arguments may be drawn from persons; for, as I have already said,³ all arguments fall into two classes, those concerned with things and those concerned with persons, since causes, time, place, occasion, instruments, means and the like are all accidents of things. I have no intention of tracing all the accidents of persons, as many have done, but shall confine myself to those from which arguments may be drawn. Such are birth, for 24 persons are generally regarded as having some resemblance to their parents and ancestors, a resemblance which sometimes leads to their living disgracefully or honourably, as the case may be; then there is nationality, for races have their own character, and the same action is not probable in the case of a barbarian, a Roman and a Greek; country 25 is another, for there is a like diversity in the laws, institutions and opinions of different states; sex, since for example a man is more likely to commit a robbery, a woman to poison; age, since different actions suit different ages; education and training, since it makes a great difference who were the instructors and what the method of instruction in each individual case; bodily constitution, for beauty is 26 often introduced as an argument for lust, strength as an argument for insolence, and their opposites for opposite conduct; fortune, since the same acts are not to be expected from rich and poor, or from one who is surrounded by troops of relations, friends or clients and one who lacks all these advantages; condition, too, is important, for it makes a great difference whether a man be famous or obscure, a magistrate or a private individual, a father or a son, a citizen or a foreigner, a free man or a slave, married or unmarried, a father or childless. Nor 27 must we pass by natural disposition, for avarice, anger, pity, cruelty, severity and the like may often be adduced to prove the credibility or the reverse of a given act; it is for instance often asked whether a man's way of living be luxurious, frugal or parsimonious. Then there is occupation, since a rustic, a lawyer, a man of business, a soldier, a sailor, a doctor all perform very different actions. We must also consider the personal ambitions of individuals, for instance whether they wish to be thought rich or eloquent, just or powerful. Past life and previous utterances are also a subject for investigation, since we are in the habit of inferring the present from the past. To these some add passion, by which they mean some temporary emotion such as anger or fear; they also add design, which may refer to the past, present or future. These latter, however, although accidents of persons, should be referred to that class of arguments which we draw from causes, as also should certain dispositions of mind, for example when we inquire whether one man is the friend or enemy of another. Names also are treated as accidents of persons; this is perfectly true, but names are rarely food for argument, unless indeed they have been given for some special reasons, such as the titles of Wise, Great, Pious, or unless the name has suggested some special thought to the bearer. Lentulus¹ for instance had the idea of conspiracy suggested to him by the fact that according to the Sibylline books and the Responses of the soothsayers the tyranny was promised to three members of the Cornelian family, and he considered himself to be the third in succession to Sulla and Cinna, since he too bore the name Cornelius. On the other hand the conceit employed by Euripides² where he makes Eteocles taunt his brother Polynices on the ground that his name is evidence of character, is feeble in the extreme. Still a name will often provide the subject for a jest,³ witness the frequent jests of Cicero on the name of Verres. Such, then, and the like are the accidents of persons. It is impossible to deal with them all either here or in other portions of this work, and I must content myself with pointing out the lines on which further enquiry should proceed.

BOOK V. x. 27-31

BOOK V. x. 31-35

I now pass to things: of these actions are the most 32 nearly connected with persons and must therefore be treated first. In regard to every action the question arises either Why or Where or When or How or By what means the action is performed. Consequently 33 arguments are drawn from the causes of past or future actions. The matter of these causes, by some called ἵλη, by others δύναμις, falls into two genera, which are each divided into four species. For the motive for any action is as a rule concerned with the acquisition, increase, preservation and use of things that are good or with the avoidance, diminution, endurance of things that are evil or with escape therefrom. All these considerations carry great weight in deliberative oratory as well. But right actions have 34 right motives, while evil actions are the result of false opinions, which originate in the things which men believe to be good or evil. Hence spring errors and evil passions such as anger, hatred, envy, desire, hope, ambition, audacity, fear and others of a similar kind. To these accidental circumstances may often be added, such as drunkenness or ignorance, which serve sometimes to excuse and sometimes to prove a charge, as for instance when a man is said to have killed one person while lying in wait for another. Further, motives are often discussed not merely to 35 convict the accused of the offence with which he is charged, but also to defend him when he contends that his action was right, that is to say proceeded from an honourable motive, a theme of which I have spoken more fully in the third book.¹ Questions of definition are also at times intimately connected with motives. Is a man a tyrannicide if he kills a tyrant by whom he has been detected in the act of adultery? Or is he guilty of sacrilege who tore down arms dedicated in a temple to enable him to drive the enemy from the city? Arguments are also drawn from place. With a view to proving our facts we consider such questions as whether a place is hilly or level, near the coast or inland, planted or uncultivated, crowded or deserted, near or far, suitable for carrying out a given design or the reverse. This is a topic which is treated most carefully by Cicero in his pro Milone.² These points and the like generally refer to questions of fact, but occasionally to questions of law as well. For we may ask whether a place is public or private, sacred or profane, our own or another's, just as where persons are concerned we ask whether a man is a magistrate, a father, a foreigner. Hence arise such questions as the following. "You have stolen private money, but since you stole it from a temple, it is not theft but sacrilege." "You have killed adulterers, an act permitted by law, but since the act was done in a brothel, it is murder." "You have committed an assault, but since the object of your assault was a magistrate, the crime is lèse-majesté. Similarly it may be urged in defence, "The act was lawful, because I was a father, a magistrate." But such points afford matter for argument when there is a controversy as to the facts, and matter for enquiry when the dispute turns on a point of law. Place also frequently affects the quality of an action, for the same action is not always lawful or seemly under all circumstances, while it makes considerable difference in what state the enquiry is taking place, for they differ both in custom and law. Further arguments drawn 41 from place may serve to secure approval or the reverse. Ajax for instance in Ovid¹ says:—

“What! do we plead our cause before the ships?
And is Ulysses there preferred to me?”

Again one of the many charges brought against Milo was that he killed Clodius on the monument of his ancestors.² Such arguments may also carry 42 weight in deliberative oratory, as may those drawn from time, which I shall now proceed to discuss. Time may, as I have said elsewhere,³ be understood in two different senses, general and special. The first sense is seen in words and phrases such as “now,” “formerly,” “in the reign of Alexander,” “in the days of the siege of Troy,” and whenever we speak of past, present or future. The second sense occurs when we speak either of definite periods of time such as “in summer,” “in winter,” “by night,” “by day,” or of fortuitous periods such as “in time of pestilence,” “in time of war,” “during a banquet.” Certain Latin writers have thought it a sufficient 43 distinction to call the general sense “time,” and the special “times.” In both senses time is of importance in advisory speeches and demonstrative oratory, but not so frequently as in forensic. For questions of law 44 turn on time, while it also determines the quality of actions and is of great importance in questions of fact; for instance, occasionally it provides irrefragable proofs, which may be illustrated by a case which I have already cited,¹ when one of the signatories to a document has died before the day on which it was signed, or when a person is accused of the commission of some crime, although he was only an infant at the time or not yet born. Further, all kinds of 45 arguments may easily be drawn either from facts previous to a certain act, or contemporary or subsequent. As regards antecedent facts the following example will illustrate my meaning; "You threatened to kill him, you went out by night, you started before him." Motives of actions may also belong to past time. Some writers have shown themselves 46 over-subtle in their classification of the second class of circumstances, making "a sound was heard" an example of circumstances combined with an act and "a shout was raised" an instance of circumstances attached to an act. As regards subsequent circumstances I may cite accusations such as "You hid yourself, you fled, livid spots and swellings appeared on the corpse." The counsel for the defence will employ the same divisions of time to discredit the charge which is brought against him. In these 47 considerations are included everything in connexion with words and deeds, but in two distinct ways. For some things are done because something else is like to follow, and others because something else has previously been done, as for instance, when the husband of a beautiful woman is accused of having acted as a procurer on the ground that he bought her after she was found guilty of adultery, or when a debauched character is accused of parricide on the ground that he said to his father "You have rebuked me for the last time."² For in the former case the accused is not a procurer because he bought the woman, but bought her because he was a procurer, while in the latter the accused is not a parricide because he used these words, but used them because he intended to kill his father. With regard to accidental circumstances, 48 which also provide matter for arguments, these clearly belong to subsequent time, but are distinguished by a certain special quality, as for instance if I should say, "Scipio was a better general than Hannibal, for he conquered Hannibal"; "He was a good pilot, for he was never shipwrecked"; "He was a good farmer, for he gathered in huge harvests"; or referring to bad qualities, "He was a prodigal, for he squandered his patrimony"; "His life was disgraceful, for he was hated by all." We must also 49 consider the resources possessed by the parties concerned, more especially when dealing with questions of fact; for it is more credible that a smaller number of persons were killed by a larger, a weaker party by a stronger, sleepers by men that were wide awake, the unsuspecting by the well-prepared, while the converse arguments may be used to prove the opposite. Such considerations arise both in deliberative and forensic oratory: in the latter they occur 50 in relation to two questions, namely, whether some given person had the will, and whether he had the power to do the deed; for hope will often create the will to act. Hence the well-known inference in Cicero: ¹ "Clodius lay in wait for Milo, not Milo for Clodius, for Clodius had a retinue of sturdy slaves, while Milo was with a party of women; Clodius was mounted, Milo in a carriage, Clodius lightly clad, Milo hampered by a cloak." With resources we may 51 couple instruments, which form part of resources and means. But sometimes instruments will provide us with indications as well, as for instance if we find a javelin sticking in a dead body. To these we may 52 add manner, the Greek τρόπος, in regard to which we ask how a thing was done. Manner is concerned sometimes with quality and the letter of the law¹. (we may for instance argue that it was unlawful to kill an adulterer by poison), sometimes with questions of fact, as for example if I argue that an act was committed with a good intent and therefore openly, or with a bad intent and therefore treacherously, by night, in a lonely place.

¹ pro Mil. vii. 17. i.e. on the Appian Way constructed by one of Clodius' ancestors. ³ III. vi. 25.

In all cases, however, in which we enquire into the 53 nature and meaning of an act, and which can be considered by themselves apart from all considerations of persons and all else that gives rise to the actual cause, there are clearly three points to which we must give attention, namely Whether it is, What it is and Of what kind it is. But as there are certain "places"² of argument which are common to all three questions, this triple division is impracticable and we must therefore consider these questions rather in connexion with those "places" in which they most naturally arise. Arguments, then, 54 may be drawn from definition, sometimes called finitio and sometimes finis. Definition is of two kinds. We may ask whether a particular quality is a virtue or make a definition precede and ask what is the nature of a virtue. Such a definition is either stated in general terms, such as Rhetoric is the science of speaking well, or in detail, such as Rhetoric is the science of correct conception, arrangement and utterance, coupled with a retentive memory and a dignified delivery.

Further, we may define a word by giving its content 55 as in the preceding instances, or by etymology: we may for instance explain *assiduus*¹ by deriving it from as and do, *locuples*² by deriving it from copia locorum, *pecuniosus*³ from copia pecorum. Genus, species, difference and property seem more especially to afford scope for definition, for we derive arguments from all of these. Genus is of little use when we desire to prove a 56 species, but of great value for its elimination. A tree is not necessarily a plane tree, but that which is not a tree is certainly not a plane tree; again, a virtue is not necessarily the virtue of justice, but that which is not a virtue is certainly not justice. We must proceed from the genus to the ultimate species; ⁴ for example, to say that man is an animal will not suffice; for animal merely gives us the genus: nor yet will the addition of the words "subject to death" be adequate; for although this epithet gives us a species, it is common to other animals as well. If, however, we define man as a rational animal, we need nothing further to make our meaning clear. On the other hand species will give us clear proof of 57 genus, but is of little service for its elimination. For example, justice is always a virtue, but that which is not justice may still be a virtue, such as fortitude, constancy or self-control. Genus therefore cannot be eliminated by species unless all the species included in the genus be eliminated, as for instance in the following sentence: That which is neither rational the epithet applied to one who served in the army at his own expense, contributing an as" (i.e. instead of receiving it)!

² locuples ("wealthy") is derived from locus = the possessors of many places.

³ pecuniosus ("moneyed") is derived from pecus = "rich in herds."
⁴ cp. § 5.

nor mortal nor an animal is not a man. To these they 58 add property and difference. Properties serve to establish definitions, differences to overthrow them.
 A property is that which happens to one particular object and that alone; speech and laughter for instance are properties of man. Or it may be something specially belonging to an object, but not to it alone; heating for instance is a property of fire. The same thing may also have a number of properties:
 light and heat are both properties of fire. Consequently, the omission of any property in a definition will impair it, but the introduction of a property, whatever it may be, will not necessarily establish a definition. We have, however, often to consider 59
 what is a property of some given object; for example,
 if it should be asserted, on the ground of etymology,
 that the peculiar property of a tyrannicide is to kill tyrants, we should deny it: for an executioner is not ipso facto a tyrannicide, if he executes a tyrant who has been delivered to him for the purpose, nor again is he a tyrannicide who kills a tyrant unwittingly or against his will. What is not a property will be a 60 difference: it is, for instance, one thing to be a slave, and another to be in a state of servitude; hence the distinction raised in connexion with persons assigned to their creditors for debt: A slave, if he is manu- mitted becomes a freedman, but this is not the case with one who is assigned. There are also other points of difference which are dealt with elsewhere.¹ Again, 61
 the term difference is applied in cases when the genus is divided into species and one species is subdivided. Animal, for instance, is a genus, mortal a species, while terrestrial or biped is a difference: for they are not actually properties, but serve to show the difference between such animals and quadrupeds or creatures of the sea. This distinction, however, comes under the province not so much of argument as of exact definition. Cicero¹ separates genus and species, which latter he calls form, from definition and includes them under relation. For example, if a person to whom another man has left all his silver should claim all his silver money as well, he would base his claim upon genus; on the other hand if when a legacy has been left to a married woman holding the position of materfamilias, it should be maintained that the legacy is not due to a woman who never came into the power of her husband, the argument is based on species, since there are two kinds of marriage.² Cicero³ further shows that definition is assisted by division, which he distinguishes from partition, making the latter the dissection of a whole into its parts and the former the division of a genus into its forms or species. The number of parts he regards as being uncertain, as for instance the elements of which a state consists; the forms or species are, however, certain, as for instance the number of forms of government, which we are told are three, democracy, oligarchy, and monarchy. It is true that he does not use these illustrations, ⁶² ⁶³ since, as he was writing to Trebatius,⁴ he preferred to draw his examples from law. I have chosen my illustrations as being more obvious. Properties have relation to questions of fact as well; for instance, it is the property of a good man to act rightly, of an angry man to be violent in speech or action, and consequently we believe that such acts are committed by persons of the appropriate character, or not committed by persons of inappropriate character. For just as certain persons possess certain qualities, so certain others do not possess certain qualities, and the argument is of precisely the same nature, though from opposite premises.

¹ Cic. Top. v. 17. ⁴ A famous lawyer, cp. III. xi. 18.

In a similar way division is valuable both for proof 65 and refutation. For proof, it is sometimes enough to establish one thing. "To be a citizen, a man must either have been born or made such." For refutation, both points must be disproved: "he was neither born nor made a citizen." This may be done in many ways, 66 and constitutes a form of argument by elimination, whereby we show sometimes that the whole is false, sometimes that only that which remains after the process of elimination is true. An example of the first of these two cases would be: "You say that you lent him money. Either you possessed it yourself, received it from another, found it or stole it. If you did not possess it, receive it from another, find or steal it, you did not lend it to him." The residue after elimin- 67 ation is shown to be true as follows: "This slave whom you claim was either born in your house or bought or given you or left you by will or captured from the enemy or belongs to another." By the elimination of the previous suppositions he is shown to belong to another. This form of argument is risky and must be employed with care; for if, in setting forth the alternatives, we chance to omit one, our whole case will fail, and our audience will be moved to laughter. It is safer to do what Cicero¹ does in the pro 68 Caecina, when he asks, "If this is not the point at issue, what is?" For thus all other points are eliminated at one swoop. Or again two contrary propositions may be advanced, either of which if established would suffice to prove the case. Take the following example from Cicero :¹ " There can be no one so hostile to Cluentius as not to grant me one thing : if it be a fact that the verdict then given was the result of bribery, the bribes must have proceeded either from Habitus or Oppianicus : if I show that they did not proceed from Habitus I prove that they proceeded from Oppianicus : if I demonstrate that they were given by Oppianicus, I clear Habitus." Or 69 we may give our opponent the choice between two alternatives of which one must necessarily be true, and as a result, whichever he chooses, he will damage his case. Cicero does this in the pro Oppio :² " Was the weapon snatched from his hands when he had attacked Cotta, or when he was trying to commit suicide ? " and in the pro Vareno :³ " You have a choice between two alternatives : either you must show that the choice of this route by Varenus was due to chance or that it was the result of this man's persuasion and inducement." He then shows that either admission tells against his opponent. Sometimes again, two propositions are stated of such 70 a character that the admission of either involves the same conclusion, as in the sentence, " We must philosophise, even though we ought not," or as in the common dilemma, " What is the use of a figure,⁴ if its meaning is clear ? And what is its use, if it is unintelligible ? " or, " He who is capable of enduring pain will lie if tortured, and so will he who cannot endure pain."

As there are three divisions of time, so the order 71 of events falls into three stages. For everything has a beginning, growth and consummation, as for instance a quarrel, blows, murder. Thus arise arguments which lend each other mutual support ; for the conclusion is inferred from the beginnings, as in the following case : " I cannot expect a purple-striped toga, when I see that the beginning of the web is black " ; or the beginning may be inferred from the conclusion : for instance the fact that Sulla resigned the dictatorship is an argument that Sulla did not take up arms with the intention of establishing a tyranny. Similarly from the growth of a situation we may 72 infer either its beginning or its end, not only in questions of fact but as regards points of equity, such as whether the conclusion is referable to the beginning, that is, " Should the man that began the quarrel be regarded as guilty of the bloodshed with which it ended ? "

¹ See IV. ii. 26. ⁴ See VII. iv. 28, IX. i. 14, IX. ii. 65.

Arguments are also drawn from similarities : " If 73 self-control is a virtue, abstinence is also a virtue." " If a guardian should be required to be faithful to his trust, so should an agent." To this class belongs the type of argument called ἐπαγωγή by the Greeks, induction by Cicero.¹ Or arguments may be drawn from unlikes: " It does not follow that if joy is a good thing, pleasure also is a good thing " : " It does not follow that what applies to the case of a woman applies also to the case of a ward." Or from contraries : " Frugality is a good thing, since luxury is an evil thing " : " If war is the cause of ill, peace will prove a remedy " : " If he who does harm unwittingly deserves pardon, he who does good unwittingly does not deserve a reward." Or 74 from contradictions : " He who is wise is not a fool." Or from consequences necessary or probable² : " If justice is a good thing, we must give right judgment": "If breach of faith is a bad thing, we must not deceive." And such arguments may also be reversed. Similar to these are the following arguments, which must therefore be classed under this same head, since it is to this that they naturally belong: "A man has not lost what he never had": "A man does not wittingly injure him whom he loves": "If one man has appointed another as his heir, he regarded, still regards and will continue to regard him with affection." However, such arguments, being incontrovertible, are of the nature of absolute indications.¹ These, 75 however, I call consequent or ἀκόλουθα; goodness, for instance, is consequent on wisdom: while in regard to things which merely have taken place afterwards or will take place I use the term insequent or παρεπόμενα, though I do not regard the question of terminology as important. Give them any name you please, as long as the meaning is clear and it is shown that the one depends on time, the other on the nature of things. I have therefore no hesitation in 76 calling the following forms of argument also consequential, although they argue from the past to the future: some however divide them into two classes, those concerned with action, as in the pro Oppio, "How could he detain against their will those whom he was unable to take to the province against their will?" and those concerned with time, as in the Verrines,² "If the first of January puts an end to the authority of the praetor's edict, why should the commencement of its authority not likewise date from the first of January?" Both these in- 77

the law of Rome, and held good only during the praetor's year of office.

stances are of such a nature that the argument is reversible. For it is a necessary consequence that those who could not be taken to the province against their will could not be retained against their will. So too I feel clear that we should rank as consequential arguments those derived from facts which lend each other mutual support and are by some regarded as forming a separate kind of argument, which they¹ call ἐκ τῶν πρὸς ἀλλήλα, arguments from things mutually related, while Cicero² styles them arguments drawn from things to which the same line of reasoning applies; take the following example³: "If it is honourable for the Rhodians to let out their harbour dues, it is honourable likewise for Hermocreon to take the contract," or "What it is honourable to learn, it is also honourable to teach." Such also is the fine sentence of Domitius Afer, 79 which has the same effect, though it is not identical in form: "I accused, you condemned." Arguments which prove the same thing from opposites are also mutually consequential; for instance, we may argue that he who says that the world was created thereby implies that it is suffering decay, since this is the property of all created things.

There is another very similar form of argument, 80 which consists in the inference of facts from their efficient causes or the reverse, a process known as argument from causes. The conclusion is sometimes necessary, sometimes generally without being necessarily true. For instance, a body casts a shadow in the light, and the shadow wherever it falls indicates the presence of a body. There are other conclusions 81 which, as I have said, are not necessary, whether as regards both cause and effect or only one of the two. For instance, "the sun colours the skin, but not everyone that is coloured receives that colour from the sun; a journey makes the traveller dusty, but every journey does not produce dust, nor is everyone that is dusty just come from a journey." As examples 82 of necessary conclusions on the other hand I may cite the following: "If wisdom makes a man good, a good man must needs be wise"; and again, "It is the part of a good man to act honourably, of a bad man to act dishonourably," or "Those who act honourably are considered good, those who act dishonourably are considered bad men." In these cases the conclusion is correct. On the other hand, "though exercise generally makes the body robust, not everyone who is robust is given to exercise, nor is everyone that is addicted to exercise robust. Nor again, because courage prevents our fearing death, is every man who has no fear of death to be regarded as a brave man; nor is the sun useless to man because it sometimes gives him a headache." Argu- 83 ments such as the following belong in the main to the hortative department of oratory:—"Virtue brings renown, therefore it should be pursued; but the pursuit of pleasure brings ill-repute, therefore it should be shunned." But the warning that we should not necessarily search for the originating cause is just: an example of such error is provided by the speech of Medea¹ beginning

"Ah! would that never there in Pelion's grove," as though her misery or guilt were due to the fact 84 that there

"The beams of fir had fallen to the ground";
or I might cite the words addressed by Philoctetes to Paris,²

"Hadst thou been other than thou art, then I Had ne'er been plunged in woe."

By tracing back causes on lines such as these we may arrive anywhere. But for the fact that Cicero¹ 85 has done so, I should regard it as absurd to add to these what is styled the conjugate argument, such as "Those who perform a just act, act justly," a self-evident fact requiring no proof; or again, "Every man has a common right to send his cattle to graze in a common pasture." Some call these arguments 86 derived from causes or efficient by the Greek name ἐκβάσεις, that is, results; for in such cases the only point considered is how one thing results from another.

Those arguments which prove the lesser from the greater or the greater from the less or equals from equals are styled apposite or comparative. A con- 87 jecture as to a fact is confirmed by argument from something greater in the following sentence: "If a man commit sacrilege, he will also commit theft"; from something less, in a sentence such as "He who lies easily and openly will commit perjury"; from something equal in a sentence such as "He who has taken a bribe to give a false verdict will take a bribe to give false witness." Points of law may be 88 proved in a similar manner; from something greater, as in the sentence "If it is lawful to kill an adulterer, it is lawful to scourge him"; from something less, "If it is lawful to kill a man attempting theft by night, how much more lawful is it to kill one who attempts robbery with violence"; from something equal, "The penalty which is just in the case of parricide is also just in the case of matricide." In all these cases we follow the syllogistic method.² The following type of argument on the 89 other hand is more serviceable in questions turning on definition or quality.¹ "If strength is good for the body, health is no less good." "If theft is a crime, sacrilege is a greater crime." "If abstinence is a virtue, so is self-control." "If the world is governed by providence, the state also requires a government." "If a house cannot be built without a plan, what of a whole city?" "If naval stores require careful supervision, so also do arms." I am 90 content to treat this type of argument as a genus without going further; others however divide it into species. For we may argue from several things to one or from one thing to several; hence arguments such as "What has happened once may happen often." We may also argue from a part to a whole, from genus to species, from that which contains to that which is contained, from the difficult to the easy, from the remote to the near, and similarly from the opposites of all these to their opposites. Now all these arguments deal with the greater or 91 the less or else with things that are equal, and if we follow up such fine distinctions, there will be no limit to our division into species. For the comparison of things is infinite; things may be more pleasant, more serious, more necessary, more honourable, more useful. I say no more for fear of falling into that very garrulity which I deprecate. The 92 number of examples of these arguments which I might quote is likewise infinite, but I will only deal with a very few. As an example of argument from something greater take the following example from the *pro Caecina*²: "Shall we suppose that that which alarms whole armies caused no alarm to a peaceful company of lawyers?" As an instance of argument from something easier, take this passage from the speech against Clodius and Curio¹: "Consider whether it would have been easy for you to secure the praetorship, when he in whose favour you withdrew failed to secure election?" The following² provides an example of argument from something more difficult: "I beg you, Tubero, to remark that I, who do not hesitate to speak of my own deed, venture to speak of that performed by Ligarius"; and again, "Has not Ligarius reason for hope, when I am permitted to intercede with you for another?" For an argument drawn from something less take this passage from the *pro Caecina*³: "Really! Is the knowledge that the men were armed sufficient to prove that violence was offered, and the fact that he fell into their hands insufficient?" Well, then, to give a brief summary of the whole question, arguments are drawn from persons, causes, place and time (which latter we have divided into preceding, contemporary and subsequent), from resources (under which we include instruments), from manner (that is, how a thing has been done), from definition, genus, species, difference, property, elimination, division, beginnings, increase, consummation, likes, unlikes, contradictions, consequents, efficient, effects, results, and comparison, which is subdivided into several species.

list

I think I should also add that arguments are drawn not merely from admitted facts, but from fictional suppositions, which the Greeks style καθ' ὑπόθεσιν, and that this latter type of argument falls into all the same divisions as those which I have regarding the mere sight of armed men in occupation of the property claimed as sufficient proof of violence.

mentioned above, since there may be as many species of fictitious arguments as there are of true arguments. When I speak of fictitious arguments 96 I mean the proposition of something which, if true, would either solve a problem or contribute to its solution, and secondly the demonstration of the similarity of our hypothesis to the case under consideration. To make this the more readily intelligible to youths who have not yet left school, I will first of all illustrate it by examples of a kind familiar to the young. There is a law to the effect that "the 97 man who refuses to support his parents is liable to imprisonment." A certain man fails to support his parents and none the less objects to going to prison. He advances the hypothesis that he would be exempt from such a penalty if he were a soldier, an infant, or if he were absent from home on the service of the state. Again in the case where a hero is allowed to choose his reward¹ we might introduce the hypotheses of his desiring to make himself a tyrant or to overthrow the temples of the gods. Such 98 arguments are specially useful when we are arguing against the letter of the law, and are thus employed by Cicero in the *pro Caecina*²: "[The interdict contains the words,] 'whence you or your household or your agent had driven him.' If your steward alone had driven me out, [it would not, I suppose, be your household but a member of your household that had driven me out]. . . . If indeed you owned no slave except the one who drove me out, [you would cry, 'If I possess a household at all, I admit that my household drove you out']. " Many other examples might be quoted from the same work. But fictitious 99 suppositions are also exceedingly useful when we are concerned with the quality of an act³: "If Catiline could try this case assisted by a jury composed of those scoundrels whom he led out with him he would condemn Lucius Murena." It is useful also for amplification ¹: "If this had happened to you during dinner in the midst of your deep potations"; or again,² "If the state could speak."

BOOK V. x. 99-103

Such in the main are the usual topics of proof 100 as specified by teachers of rhetoric, but it is not sufficient to classify them generically in our instructions, since from each of them there arises an infinite number of arguments, while it is in the very nature of things impossible to deal with all their individual species. Those who have attempted to perform this latter task have exposed themselves in equal degree to two disadvantages, saying too much and yet failing to cover the whole ground. Consequently 101 the majority of students, finding themselves lost in an inextricable maze, have abandoned all individual effort, including even that which their own wits might have placed within their power, as though they were fettered by certain rigid laws, and keeping their eyes fixed upon their master have ceased to follow the guidance of nature. But as it is not 102 in itself sufficient to know that all proofs are drawn either from persons or things, because each of these groups is subdivided into a number of different heads so he who has learned that arguments must be drawn from antecedent, contemporary or subsequent facts will not be sufficiently instructed in the knowledge of the method of handling arguments to understand what arguments are to be drawn from the circumstances of each particular case; especially 103 as the majority of proofs are to be found in the special circumstances of individual cases and have no connexion with any other dispute, and therefore while they are the strongest, are also the least obvious, since, whereas we derive what is common to all cases from general rules, we have to discover for ourselves whatever is peculiar to the case which we have in hand. ~~This type of argument may~~ 104 ~~reasonably~~ be described as drawn from circumstances, there being no other word to express the Greek περίστασις, or from those things which are peculiar to any given case. For instance, in the case of the priest who having committed adultery desired to save his own life by means of the law¹ which gave him the power of saving one life, the appropriate argument to employ against him would run as follows: "You would save more than one guilty person, since, if you were discharged, it would not be lawful to put the adulteress to death." For such an argument follows from the law forbidding the execution of the adulteress apart from the adulterer. Again, take the case falling under the 105

law which lays down that bankers may pay only half of what they owe, while permitted to recover the whole of what they are owed. One banker requires payment of the whole sum owed him by another banker. The appropriate argument supplied by the subject to the creditor is that there was special reason for the insertion of the clause² sanctioning the recovery of the whole of a debt by a banker, since there was no need of such a law as against others, inasmuch as all have the right to recover the whole of a debt from any save a banker. But while some fresh considerations are bound to 106 present themselves in every kind of subject, this is more especially the case in questions turning on the letter of the law, since not merely individual words, but still more whole phrases are frequently ambiguous. And these considerations must vary 107 according to the complexity of laws and other documents, whether they are in agreement or contradictory, since fact throws light on fact and law on law as in the following argument: "I owed you no money: you never summoned me for debt, you took no interest from me, nay, you actually borrowed money from me." It is laid down by law that he who refuses to defend his father when accused of treason thereby loses his right to inherit. A son denies that he is liable to this penalty unless his father is acquitted. How does he support this contention? There is another law to the effect that a man found guilty of treason shall be banished and his advocate with him. Cicero in the pro Cluentio 1 108 says that Publius Popilius and Tiberius Gutta were not condemned for receiving bribes to give a false verdict, but for attempting to bribe the jury. What is his argument in support of this view? That their accusers, who were themselves found guilty of bribing the jury, were restored in accordance with law after winning their case. But the consideration 109 as to what argument should be put forward requires no less care than the consideration of the manner in which we are to prove that which we have put forward. Indeed in this connexion invention, if not the most important, is certainly the first consideration. For, just as weapons are superfluous for one who does not know what his target is, so too arguments are useless, unless you see in advance to what they are to be applied. This is a task for which no formal rules can be laid down Conse- 110

quently, though a number of orators, who have studied the same rules, will use similar kinds of arguments, one will discover a greater number of arguments to suit his case than another. Let us take as an example a controversial theme involving problems that have little in common with other cases. "When Alexander destroyed Thebes, he 111 found documents showing that the Thebans had lent a hundred talents to the Thessalians. These documents he presented to the Thessalians as a reward for the assistance they had given him in the campaign. Subsequently the Thebans, after the restoration of their city by Cassander, demanded that the Thessalians should repay the money." The case is tried before the Amphictyonic council. It is admitted that the Thebans lent the money and were not repaid. The whole dispute turns on the 112 allegation that Alexander had excused the Thessalians from payment of the debt. It is also admitted that the Thessalians had received no money from Alexander. The question is therefore whether his gift is equivalent to his having given them money. What use will formal topics of argument be in such 113 a case, unless I first convince myself that the gift of Alexander made no difference, that he had not the power to make it, and that he did not make it? The opening of the Thebans' plea presents no difficulty and is likely to win the approval of the judges, since they are seeking to recover by right what was taken from them by force. But out of this point arises a violent controversy as to the right of war, since the Thessalians urge that kingdoms and peoples and the frontiers of nations and cities depend upon these rights. To meet this argument 114

it is necessary to discover in what respect this case differs from others which are concerned with property that has fallen into the hands of the victor: the difficulty moreover lies not so much in the proof as in the way it should be put forward. We may begin by stating that the rights of war do not hold good in any matter which can be brought before a court of justice, and that what is taken by force of arms can only be retained by force of arms, and consequently, wherever the rights of war hold good, there is no room for the functions of a judge, while on the contrary where the functions of the judge come into play, the rights of war cease to have any force. The reason why it is necessary 115 to discover this principle is to enable us to bring the following argument into play: that prisoners of war are free on returning to their native land just because the gains of war cannot be retained except by the exercise of the same violence by which they were acquired. Another peculiar feature of the case is that it is tried before the Amphictyonic council,¹ and you will remember that we have to employ different methods in pleading a case before the centumviral court and before an arbitrator, though the problems of the cases may be identical. Secondly 116 we may urge that the right to refuse payment could not have been conferred by the victor because he possesses only what he holds, but a right, being incorporeal, cannot be grasped by the hand.² It is more difficult to discover this principle than, once discovered, to defend it with arguments such as that the position of an heir and a conqueror are fundamentally different, since right passes to the one and property to the other. It is further an 117 argument peculiar to the subject matter of the case that the right over a public debt could not have passed to the victor, because the repayment of a sum of money lent by a whole people is due to them all, and as long as any single one of them survives, he is creditor for the whole amount: but the Thebans were never all of them to a man in Alexander's power. The force of this argument resides 118 in the fact that it is not based on any external support, but holds good in itself. Proceeding to the third line of argument we may note that the first portion of it is of a more ordinary type, namely that the right to repayment is not based on the actual document, a plea which can be supported by many arguments. Doubt may also be thrown on Alexander's purpose: did he intend to honour them or to trick them? Another argument peculiar to the subject (indeed it practically introduces a new discussion) is that the Thebans may be regarded as having in virtue of their restoration recovered the right even though it be admitted that they had lost it. Again Cassander's purpose may be discussed, but, as the case is being pleaded before the Amphictyonic council, we shall find that the most powerful plea that can be urged is that of equity.

I make these remarks, not because I think that a 119 knowledge of the "places" ¹ from which arguments may be derived is useless (had I thought so, I should have passed them by) but to prevent those who have learnt these rules from neglecting other considerations and regarding themselves as having a perfect and absolute knowledge of the whole subject, and to make them realise that, unless they acquire a thorough knowledge of the remaining points which I am about to discuss, they will be the possessors of what I can only call a dumb science. For the discovery of arguments was not, 120 the result of the publication of text-books, but every kind of argument was put forward before any rules were laid down, and it was only later that writers of rhetoric noted them and collected them for publication. A proof of this is the fact that the examples which they use are old and quoted from the orators, while they themselves discover nothing new or that has not been said before. The creators of 121 the art were therefore the orators, though we owe a debt of gratitude also to those who have given us a short cut to knowledge. For thanks to them the arguments discovered by the genius of earlier orators have not got to be hunted out and noted down in detail. But this does not suffice to make an orator any more than it suffices to learn the art of gymnastic in school: the body must be assisted by continual practice, self control, diet and above all by nature; on the other hand none of these are sufficient in themselves without the aid of art. I would also 122 have students of oratory consider that all the forms of argument which I have just set forth cannot be found in every case, and that when the subject on which we have to speak has been propounded, it is no use considering each separate type of argument and knocking at the door of each with a view to discovering whether they may chance to serve to prove our point, except while we are in the position of mere learners without any knowledge of actual practice. Such a proceeding merely retards the 123 process of speaking to an incalculable extent, if it is always necessary for us to try each single argument and thus learn by experiment what is apt and suitable to our case. In fact I am not sure that it will not be an actual obstacle to progress unless a certain innate penetration and a power of rapid divination seconded by study lead us straight to the arguments which suit our case. For just as the melody of the voice is most pleasing when accompanied by the lyre, yet if the musician's hand be slow and, unless he first look at the strings and take their measure, hesitate as to which strings match the several notes of the voice, it would be better that he should content himself with the natural music of the voice unaccompanied by any instrument; even so our theory of speaking must be adapted and, like the lyre, attuned to such rules as these. But it is only by constant practice that we can secure that, just as the hands of the musician, even though his eyes be turned elsewhere, produce bass, treble or intermediate notes by force of habit, so the thought of the orator should suffer no delay owing to the variety and number of possible arguments, but that the latter should present themselves uncalled and, just as letters and syllables require no thought on the part of a writer, so arguments should spontaneously follow the thought of the orator.

XI. The third kind of proof, which is drawn into the service of the case from without, is styled a παράδειγμα by the Greeks, who apply the term to all comparisons of like with like, but more especially to historical parallels. Roman writers have for the most part preferred to give the name of comparison to that which the Greeks style παραβολή, while they translate παράδειγμα by example, although this latter involves comparison, while the former is of the nature of an example. For my own part, I 2 prefer with a view to making my purpose easier of apprehension to regard both as παραδείγματα and to call them examples. Nor am I afraid of being thought to disagree with Cicero, although he does separate comparison from example.¹ For he divides all arguments into two classes, induction and ratiocination, just as most Greeks² divide it into πᾶραδείγματα and ἐπιχειρήματα, explaining παράδειγμα

 as a rhetorical induction. The method of argument 3 chiefly used by Socrates was of this nature: when he had asked a number of questions to which his adversary could only agree, he finally inferred the conclusion of the problem under discussion from its resemblance to the points already conceded. This method is known as induction, and though it cannot be used in a set speech, it is usual in a speech to assume that which takes the form of a question in dialogue. For instance take the follow- 4 ing question: "What is the finest form of fruit? Is it not that which is best?" This will be admitted.
 "What of the horse? What is the finest? Is it not that which is the best?" Several more questions of the same kind follow. Last comes the question for the sake of which all the others were put:
 "What of man? Is not he the finest type who is best?" The answer can only be in the affirmative.
 Such a procedure is most valuable in the examina- 5
 tion of witnesses, but is differently employed in a set speech. For there the orator either answers his own questions or makes an assumption of that which in dialogue takes the form of a question. "What is the finest fruit? The best, I should imagine. What is the finest horse? The swiftest. So too the finest type of man is not he that is noblest of birth, but he that is most excellent in virtue."

¹ de Inv. I. xxx. 49.

² cp. Ar. Rh. i. ii. 18.

All arguments of this kind, therefore, must be from things like or unlike or contrary. Similes are, it is true, sometimes employed for the embellishment of the speech as well, but I will deal with them in their proper place¹; at present I am concerned with the use of similitude in proof. The most important of proofs of this class is that which is most properly styled example, that is to say the adducing of some past action real or assumed which may serve to persuade the audience of the truth of the point which we are trying to make. We must therefore consider whether the parallel is complete or only partial, that we may know whether to use it in its entirety or merely to select those portions which are serviceable. We argue from the like when we say, "Saturninus was justly killed, as were the Gracchi"; from the unlike when we say, "Brutus killed his sons for plotting against the state, while Manlius condemned his son to death for his valour";² from the contrary when we say, "Marcellus restored the works of art which had been taken from the Syracusans who were our enemies, while Verres³ took the same works of art from our allies." The same divisions apply also to such forms of proof in panegyric or denunciation. It will also be found useful when we are speaking of what is likely to happen to refer to historical parallels: for instance if the orator asserts that Dionysius is asking for a bodyguard that with their armed assistance he may establish himself as tyrant, he may adduce the parallel case of Pisistratus who secured the supreme power by similar means.

But while examples may at times, as in the last 9 instance, apply in their entirety, at times we shall argue from the greater to the less or from the less to the greater. "Cities have been overthrown by the violation of the marriage bond. What punishment then will meet the case of adultery?" "Flute-players have been recalled by the state to the city which they had left. How much more then is it just that leading citizens who have rendered good service to their country should be recalled from that exile to which they have been driven by envy." 10 Arguments from unlikes are most useful in exhortation. Courage is more remarkable in a woman than in a man. Therefore, if we wish to kindle someone's ambition to the performance of heroic deeds, we shall find that parallels drawn from the cases of Horatius and Torquatus will carry less weight than that of the woman by whose hand Pyrrhus was slain, and if we wish to urge a man to meet death, the cases of Cato and Scipio will carry less weight than that of Lucretia. These are however arguments from the greater to the less. Let me then give you separate 11 examples of these classes of argument from the pages of Cicero; for where should I find better? The following passage from the *pro Murena*² is an instance of argument from the like: "For it happened that I myself when a candidate had two patricians as competitors, the one a man of the most unscrupulous and reckless character, the other a most excellent and respectable citizen. Yet I defeated Catiline by force of merit and Galba by my popularity." The *pro Milone*¹ will give us an 12 example of argument from the greater to the less:

 "They say that he who confesses to having killed a man is not fit to look upon the light of day. Where is the city in which men are such fools as to argue thus? It is Rome itself, the city whose first trial on a capital charge was that of Marcus Horatius, the bravest of men, who, though the city had not yet attained its freedom, was none the less acquitted
 by the assembly of the Roman people, in spite of the fact that he confessed that he had slain his sister with his own hand." The following² is an example of argument from the less to the greater:
 "I killed, not Spurius Maelius, who by lowering the price of corn and sacrificing his private fortune fell under the suspicion of desiring to make himself king, because it seemed that he was courting popularity with the common people overmuch," and so on till we come to, "No, the man I killed (for my client would not shrink from the avowal, since his deed had saved his country) was he who committed abominable adultery even in the shrines of the gods";
 then follows the whole invective against Clodius.

Arguments from unlikes present great variety, for 13
 they may turn on kind, manner, time, place, etcetera, almost every one of which Cicero employs to overthrow the previous decisions that seemed to apply to the case of Cluentius,³ while he makes use of argument from contraries when he minimises⁴ the importance of the censorial stigma by praising Scipio Africanus, who in his capacity of censor allowed one whom he openly asserted to have committed deliberate perjury to retain his horse, because no one had appeared as evidence against him, though - he promised to come forward himself to bear witness to his guilt, if any should be found to accuse him. I have paraphrased this passage because it is too long to quote. A brief example of a similar argument is 14 to be found in Virgil,¹

“But he, whom falsely thou dost call thy father,
Even Achilles, in far other wise
Dealt with old Priam, and Priam was his foe.”

Historical parallels may however sometimes be related in full, as in the *pro Milone*²: “When a military tribune serving in the army of Gaius Marius, to whom he was related, made an assault upon the honour of a common soldier, the latter killed him; for the virtuous youth preferred to risk his life by slaying him to suffering such dishonour. And yet the great Marius acquitted him of all crime and let him go scot free.” On the other hand in certain 15 cases it will be sufficient merely to allude to the parallel, as Cicero does in the same speech³: “For neither the famous Servilius Ahala nor Publius Nasica nor Lucius Opimius nor the Senate during my consulship could be cleared of serious guilt, if it were a crime to put wicked men to death.” Such parallels will be adduced at greater or less length according as they are familiar or as the interests or adornment of our case may demand.

A similar method is to be pursued in quoting from 17 the fictions of the poets, though we must remember that they will be of less force as proofs. The same supreme authority, the great master of eloquence, shows us how we should employ such quotations. For 18 an example of this type will be found in the same speech⁴: “And it is therefore, gentlemen of the jury, that men of the greatest learning have recorded in their fictitious narratives that one who had killed his mother to avenge his father was acquitted, when the opinion of men was divided as to his guilt, not merely by the decision of a deity, but by the vote of the wisest of goddesses." Again those fables 19 which, although they did not originate with Aesop (for Hesiod seems to have been the first to write them), are best known by Aesop's name, are specially attractive to rude and uneducated minds, which are less suspicious than others in their reception of fictions and, when pleased, readily agree with the arguments from which their pleasure is derived. Thus Menenius Agrippa¹ is said to have reconciled the plebs to the patricians by his fable of the limbs' quarrel with the belly. Horace² also did not regard 20 the employment of fables as beneath the dignity even of poetry; witness his lines that narrate

"What the shrewd fox to the sick lion told."

The Greeks call such fables αἶνοι (tales) and, as I have already³ remarked, Aesopean or Libyan stories, while some Roman writers term them "apologues," though the name has not found general acceptance. Similar to these is that class of proverb which may 21 be regarded as an abridged fable and is understood allegorically: "The burden is not mine to carry," he said, "the ox is carrying panniers."

Simile has a force not unlike that of example, more 22 especially when drawn from things nearly equal without any admixture of metaphor, as in the following case: "Just as those who have been accustomed to receive bribes in the Campus Martius are specially hostile to those whom they suspect of having withheld the money, so in the present case the judges came into court with a strong prejudice against the accused.”¹ For παραβολή, which Cicero² translates 23

BOOK V. XI. 22-24

by “comparison,” is often apt to compare things whose resemblance is far less obvious. Nor does it merely compare the actions of men as Cicero does in the *pro Murena*³: “But if those who have just come into harbour from the high seas are in the habit of showing the greatest solicitude in warning those who are on the point of leaving port of the state of the weather, the likelihood of falling in with pirates, and the nature of the coasts which they are like to visit (for it is a natural instinct that we should take a kindly interest in those who are about to face the dangers from which we have just escaped), what think you should be my attitude who am now in sight of land after a mighty tossing on the sea, towards this man who, as I clearly see, has to face the wildest weather?” On the contrary, similes of this kind are sometimes drawn from dumb animals and inanimate objects. Further, since similar objects 24 often take on a different appearance when viewed from a different angle, I feel that I ought to point out that the kind of comparison which the Greeks call εἰκών, and which expresses the appearance of things and persons (as for instance in the line of Cassius⁴—

“Who is he yonder that doth writhe his face

Like some old man whose feet are wrapped in wool?”)

should be more sparingly used in oratory than those comparisons which help to prove our point. For instance, if you wish to argue that the mind requires cultivation, you would use a comparison drawn from the soil, which if neglected produces thorns and thickets, but if cultivated will bear fruit; or if you are exhorting someone to enter the service of the state, you will point out that bees and ants, though not merely dumb animals, but tiny insects, still toil for the common weal. Of this kind is the saying 25 of Cicero¹: "As our bodies can make no use of their members without a mind to direct them, so the state can make no use of its component parts, which may be compared to the sinews, blood and limbs, unless it is directed by law." And just as he draws this simile in the pro Cluentio from the analogy of the human body, so in the *pro Cornelio*² he draws a simile from horses, and in the *pro Archia*³ from stones. As I have already said, the following type 26 of simile comes more readily to hand: "As oarsmen are useless without a steersman, so soldiers are useless without a general." Still it is always possible to be misled by appearances in the use of simile, and we must therefore use our judgment in their employment. For though a new ship is more useful than one which is old, this simile will not apply to friendship: and again, though we praise one who is liberal with her money, we do not praise one who is liberal with her embraces. In these cases there is similitude in the epithets old and liberal, but their force is different, when applied to ships and friendship, money and embraces. Consequently, it is all- 27 important in this connexion to consider whether the simile is really applicable. So in answering those Socratic questions which I mentioned above,⁴ the greatest care must be taken to avoid giving an incautious answer, such as those given by the wife of Xenophon to Aspasia in the dialogue of Aeschines the Socratic: the passage is translated by Cicero⁵ as follows: "Tell me, pray, wife of Xenophon, if your 28 neighbour has finer gold ornaments than you, would you prefer hers or yours?" "Hers," she replied. "Well, then, if her dress and the rest of her ornaments are more valuable than yours, which would you prefer, hers or yours?" "Hers," she replied. "Come, then," said she, "if her husband is better than yours, would you prefer yours or hers?" At this the wife of 29 Xenophon not unnaturally blushed; for she had answered ill in replying that she would prefer her neighbour's gold ornaments to her own, since it would be wrong to do so. If on the other hand she had replied that she would prefer her ornaments to be of the same quality as those of her neighbour, she might have answered without putting herself to the blush that she would prefer her husband to be like him who was his superior in virtue.

I am aware that some writers have shown pedantic 30 zeal in making a minute classification of similes, and have pointed out that there is lesser similitude (such as that of a monkey to a man or a statue when first blocked out to its original), a greater similitude (for which compare the proverb "As like as egg to egg"), a similitude in things dissimilar (an elephant, for instance, and an ant both belong to the genus animal), and dissimilitude in things similar (puppies and kids, for example, are unlike the parents,¹ for they differ from them in point of age). So too they 31 distinguish between contraries: some are opposites, as night to day, some hurtful, as cold water to a fever, some contradictory, as truth to falsehood, and some negative, as things which are not hard when contrasted with things which are hard. But I cannot see that such distinctions have any real bearing on the subject under discussion.

It is more important for our purpose to note that 32 arguments may be drawn from similar, opposite, and dissimilar points of law. As an example of the first, take the following passage from the Topica of Cicero,¹ where he argues that a man to whom the usufruct of a house has been left will not restore it in the interests of the heir if it collapses; just as he would not replace a slave if he should die. The following will provide an example of an argument drawn from opposite points of law: "The absence of a formal contract is no bar to the legality of a marriage, provided the parties cohabit by mutual consent, since the signing of a formal document will count for nothing in the absence of such mutual consent." An instance of an argument drawn from dissimilar points of law occurs in the pro Caecina of Cicero²: "If anyone had driven me from my house 33 by armed violence, I should have ground for action against him. Have I then no ground, if he has prevented me from entering my house?" Dissimilar points may be illustrated by the following example³: "Because a man has bequeathed all his silver to a given person and this bequest is regarded as including silver coin as well as plate, it does not follow that he intended all outstanding debts to be paid to the legatee."

Some draw a distinction between analogy and 34 similarity, but personally I regard the former as included under the latter. For the statement that the relation of 1 to 10 is the same as that of 10 to 100 certainly involves similarity, just as does the statement that a bad citizen may be compared to an actual enemy. But arguments of this kind are carried still further: "If connexion with a male slave is disgraceful to the mistress of the house, so is the connexion of the master with a female slave. If pleasure is an end sought by dumb animals, so also must it be with men." But these arguments 35 may readily be met by arguments from dissimilars: "It is not the same thing for the master of the house to have intercourse with a female slave as for the mistress to have intercourse with a male slave; nor does it follow that because dumb animals pursue pleasure, reasoning beings should do likewise." Or they may even be met by arguments from opposites; as for instance, "Because pleasure is an end sought by dumb animals, it should not be sought by reasoning beings."

Authority also may be drawn from external sources 36 to support a case. Those who follow the Greeks, who call such arguments κρίσεις, style them judgments or adjudications, thereby referring not to matters on which judicial sentence has been pronounced (for such decisions form examples or precedents), but to whatever may be regarded as expressing the opinion of nations, peoples, philosophers, distinguished citizens, or illustrious poets. Nay, even common sayings and popular beliefs may 37 be found to be useful. For they form a sort of testimony, which is rendered all the more impressive by the fact that it was not given to suit special cases, but was the utterance or action of minds swayed neither by prejudice or influence, simply because it seemed the most honourable or honest thing to say or do. For instance, if I am speaking of the mis- 38 fortunes of this mortal life, surely it will help me to adduce the opinion of those nations who hold that we should weep over the new-born child and rejoice over the dead. Or if I am urging the judge to shew pity, surely my argument may be assisted by the fact that Athens, the wisest of all states, regarded pity not merely as an emotion, but even as a god. Again, do we not regard the precepts of the Seven Wise Men as so many rules of life? If an adulteress is on her trial for poisoning, is she not already to be regarded as condemned by the judgment of Marcus Cato, who asserted that every adulteress was as good as a poisoner? As for reflexions drawn from the poets, not only speeches, but even the works of the philosophers, are full of them; for although the philosophers think everything inferior to their own precepts and writings, they have not thought it beneath their dignity to quote numbers of lines from the poets to lend authority to their statements. Again, a remarkable example of the weight carried by authority is provided by the fact that when the Megarians disputed the possession of Salamis with the Athenians, the latter prevailed by citing a line from Homer,¹ which is not however found in all editions, to the effect that Ajax united his ships with those of the Athenians. Generally received sayings also become common property owing to the very fact that they are anonymous, as, for instance, "Friends are a treasure," or "Conscience is as good as a thousand witnesses," or, to quote Cicero,² "In the words of the old proverb, birds of a feather flock together." Sayings such as these would not have acquired immortality had they not carried conviction of their truth to all mankind. Some include under this head the supernatural authority that is derived from oracles, as for instance the response asserting that Socrates was the wisest of mankind: indeed, they rank it above all other authorities. Such authority is rare, but may prove useful. It is employed by Cicero in his speech on the Replies of the Sooth-sayers¹ and in the oration in which he denounced Catiline to the people,² when he points to the statue of Jupiter crowning a column, and again in the pro Ligario,³ where he admits the cause of Caesar to be the better because the gods have decided in his favour. When such arguments are inherent in the case itself they are called supernatural evidence; when they are adduced from without they are styled supernatural arguments. Sometimes, again, it may 43 be possible to produce some saying or action of the judge, of our adversary or his advocate in order to prove our point. There have therefore been some writers who have regarded examples and the use of authorities of which I am speaking as belonging to inartificial proofs, on the ground that the orator does not discover them, but receives them ready-made. But the point is of great importance. For 44 witnesses and investigation and the like all make some pronouncement on the actual matter under trial, whereas arguments drawn from without are in themselves useless, unless the pleader has the wit to apply them in such a manner as to support the points which he is trying to make.

XII. Such in the main are the views about proof which I have either heard from others or learned by experience. I would not venture to assert that this is all there is to be said; indeed I would exhort students to make further researches on the subject, for I admit the possibilities of making further discoveries. Still anything that may be discovered will not differ greatly from what I have said here.

I will now proceed to make a few remarks as to how proofs should be employed.

It has generally been laid down that an argument 2 to be effective must be based on certainty; for it is obviously impossible to prove what is doubtful by what is no less doubtful. Still some things which are adduced as proof require proof themselves. "You killed your husband, for you were an adulteress." 1 Adultery must first be proved: once that is certain it can be used as an argument to prove what is uncertain. "Your javelin was found in the body of the murdered man." He denies that it was his. If this point is to serve as a proof, it must itself be proved. It is, however, necessary in this connection to point 3 out that there are no stronger proofs than those in which uncertainty has been converted into certainty. "You committed the murder, for your clothes were stained with blood." This argument is not so strong if the accused admits that his clothes were bloodstained as if the fact is proved against his denial. For if he admits it, there are still a number of ways in which the blood could have got on to his clothes: if on the other hand he denies it, he makes his whole case turn on this point, and if his contention is disproved, he will be unable to make a stand on any subsequent ground. For it will be thought that he would never have told a lie in denying the allegation, unless he had felt it a hopeless task to justify himself if he admitted it.

In insisting on our strongest arguments we must 4 take them singly, whereas our weaker arguments should be massed together: for it is undesirable that those arguments which are strong in themselves should have their force obscured by the surrounding matter, since it is important to show their true nature: on the other hand arguments which are naturally weak will receive mutual support if grouped together. Consequently arguments 5 which have no individual force on the ground of strength will acquire force in virtue of their number, since all tend to prove the same thing. For instance, if one man is accused of having murdered another for the sake of his property, it may be argued as follows: "You had expectations of succeeding to the inheritance, which was moreover very large: you were a poor man, and at the time in question were specially hard pressed by your creditors: you had also offended him whose heir you were, and knew that he intended to alter his will." These arguments are trivial and commonplace in detail, but their cumulative force is damaging. They may not have the overwhelming force of a thunderbolt, but they will have all the destructive force of hail.

There are certain arguments, which must not 6 merely be stated, but supported as well. If we say, "The motive for the crime was greed," we must show the force of greed as a motive: if we say that anger was the motive, we must show the sway that this passion has over the minds of men. Thus our arguments will not only be strengthened, but will be more ornamental as well, since we shall have produced something more than a mere fleshless skeleton. It also makes an enormous difference, 7 supposing that we allege hatred as the motive for a crime, whether such hatred was due to envy, injury or unlawful influence, whether it was recent or of long standing, whether it was directed against an inferior, an equal or a superior, against a stranger or a relative. There are special methods for the treatment of all these arguments, and the treatment to be selected will depend on the interests of the case which we are defending. On the other hand 8 we must not always burden the judge with all the arguments we have discovered, since by so doing we shall at once bore him and render him less inclined to believe us. For he will hardly suppose those proofs to be valid which we ourselves who produce them regard as insufficient. On the other hand, where the facts are fairly obvious, it would be as foolish to argue about them as to bring some artificial light into broad sunlight.

To these proofs some authorities would add those 9 which they call pathetic or emotional. Aristotle¹ indeed holds that the strongest argument in support of a speaker is that he is a good man. This no doubt is the best support, but to seem good is also of value, though the semblance is but a bad second to the reality. Of this nature is the noble defence 10 of Scaurus. "Quintus Varius of Sucro asserts that Aemilius Scaurus has betrayed the interests of the Roman people: Aemilius Scaurus denies it." A similar defence is said to have been employed by Iphicrates²: he asked Aristophon who was accusing him on a similar charge of treason whether he would consent to betray his country for a bribe: when Aristophon replied in the negative, he continued, "Have I then done what you would have refused to do?" We must however take the 11 character of the judge into consideration and seek out such arguments as will appeal to him. I have already spoken of this in the rules which I laid down for the exordium and for deliberative oratory.¹ Another form of proof is provided by asseveration 12 as in "I did this," "You told me this," or "O outrageous crime!" and the like. Every pleading should contain some such asseverations; if it does not, the loss will be considerable. Still asseverations must not be regarded as supports of the first importance, since they can be produced by either party in the same case with the same emphasis. A more forcible kind of proof is that drawn 13 from character and supported by some plausible reason, as for instance, "It is not likely that a wounded man or one who has lost his son would accuse anyone who is not guilty, since if he accused an innocent man, he would free the real offender from all risk of punishment." It is from such arguments that fathers seek support when pleading against their sons or one relative against another.

The further question has been raised as to whether 14 the strongest arguments should be placed first, to take possession of the judge's mind, or last, to leave an impression on it; or whether they should be divided between the commencement and close of the proof, adopting the Homeric disposition of placing the weakest in the centre of the column,² so that they may derive strength from their neighbours. But in the disposition of our arguments we must be guided by the interests of the individual case: there is only one exception to this general rule in my opinion, namely, that we should avoid descending from the strongest proofs to the weakest.

I have been content to give a brief outline of my 15 views concerning these points, and have put them forward in such a way as to show as clearly as was in my power the various topics and kinds of arguments. Others have dealt with the subject at greater length, preferring to deal with the whole subject of common-places and to show how each topic may be treated. This seems to me unnecessary, since it is as a rule 10 obvious what should be said against the injurious conduct or avarice of our opponents, or against a hostile witness or powerful friends; to say everything on all these subjects is an endless task, as endless in fact as if I were to attempt to lay down rules for dealing with every dispute that can ever occur and all the questions, arguments and opinions thereby involved. I do not venture to suppose that 17 I have pointed out all the circumstances that may give rise to arguments, but I think that I have done so in the majority of cases.

This was a task which required all the more careful handling because the declamations, which we used to employ as foils wherewith to practise for the duels of the forum, have long since departed from the true form of pleading and, owing to the fact that they are composed solely with the design of giving pleasure, have become flaccid and nerveless: indeed, declaimers are guilty of exactly the same offence as slave-dealers who castrate boys in order to increase the attractions of their beauty. For just as the 18 slave-dealer regards strength and muscle, and above all, the beard and other natural characteristics of manhood as blemishes, and softens down all that would be sturdy if allowed to grow, on the ground that it is harsh and hard, even so we conceal the manly form of eloquence and power of speaking closely and forcibly by giving it a delicate complexion of style and, so long as what we say is smooth and polished, are absolutely indifferent as to whether our words have any power or no. But I take Nature for 19 my guide and regard any man whatsoever as fairer to view than a eunuch, nor can I believe that Providence is ever so indifferent to what itself has created as to allow weakness to be an excellence, nor again can I think that the knife can render beautiful that which, if produced in the natural course of birth, would be regarded as a monster. A false resemblance to the female sex may in itself delight lust, if it will, but depravity of morals will never acquire such ascendancy as to succeed in giving real value to that to which it has succeeded in giving a high price. Consequently, although this debauched 20 eloquence (for I intend to speak with the utmost frankness) may please modern audiences by its effeminate and voluptuous charms, I absolutely refuse to regard it as eloquence at all: for it retains not the slightest trace of purity and virility in itself, not to say of these qualities in the speaker. When the 21 masters of sculpture and painting desired to carve or paint forms of ideal beauty, they never fell into the error of taking some Bagoas or Megabyzus¹ as models, but rightly selected the well-known Doryphorus,² equally adapted either for the fields of war or for the wrestling school, and other warlike and athletic youths as types of physical beauty. Shall we then, who are endeavouring to mould the ideal orator, equip eloquence not with weapons but with timbrels? Consequently, let the youth whom we 22 are training devote himself, as far as in him lies, to the imitation of truth and, in view of the fact that the battles of the forum that await him are not few, let him strive for victory in the schools and learn how to strike the vitals of his foe and protect his own; and let his instructor insist on his doing this above all else and reserve his special approval for the mastery of this art. For though young men may be lured to evil practices by praise, they still prefer to be praised for what is right. At the present time ²³ the misfortune is that teachers more often than not pass over what is necessary in silence, and utility is not accounted one of the good qualities of eloquence. But I have dealt with these points in another work,¹ and shall often have to recur to them in this. I will now return to my prescribed course.

BOOK V. XII. 18-22

XIII. Refutation may be understood in two senses. For the duty of the defence consists wholly in refutation, while whatever is said by our opponents must be rebutted, whether we are speaking for the defence or the prosecution. It is in this sense that refutation is assigned the fourth place² in pleadings, but the methods required in either case are identical. For the principles of argument in refutation can only be drawn from the same sources as those used in proof, while topics and thoughts, words and figures will all be on the same lines. As a rule no strong ² appeal to the emotions is made in refutation.

It is not, however, without reason that, as Cicero so often testifies,³ the task of defence has always been considered harder than that of prosecution. In the first place accusation is a simpler task: for the charge is put forward in one definite form, but its refutation may take a number of different forms, since as a rule it is sufficient for the accuser that his charge should be true, whereas counsel for the defence may deny or justify the facts, raise the question of competence,¹ make excuses, plead for mercy, soften, extenuate, or divert the charge, express contempt or derision. The task of the accuser is consequently straightforward and, if I may use the phrase, vociferous; but the defence requires a thousand arts and stratagems. Moreover the prosecutor generally produces a speech ³ which he has prepared at home, while the counsel for the defence has frequently to deal with quite unexpected points. The prosecutor brings forward his witnesses, while counsel for the defence has to refute the charge by arguments drawn from the case itself. The prosecutor draws his material from the odium excited by the charges, even though it have no justification, denouncing parricide, sacrilege, or treason, whereas counsel for the defence can only deny them. Consequently quite moderate speakers have proved adequate in prosecution, while no one can be a good counsel for the defence unless he possesses real eloquence. In a word, it is just so much easier to accuse than to defend as it is easier to inflict than to heal a wound.

¹ It is not clear what passages Quintilian has in his mind.

The nature of the arguments put forward by our ⁴ opponent and the manner in which he produces them will, however, make an enormous difference to our task. We must therefore first consider what it is to which we have to reply, whether it is part and parcel of the actual case or has been introduced from circumstances lying outside the case. For in the former case we must deny or justify the facts or raise the question of competence: for these are practically the sole methods of defence available in the courts. Pleas for mercy,² which are not in any sense a ⁵ method of actual defence, can rarely be used, and only before judges who are not limited to some precise form of verdict.¹ Even those speeches delivered before Gaius Caesar² and the triumvirs on behalf of members of the opposite party, although they do employ such pleas for mercy, also make use of the ordinary methods of defence. For I think you will agree with me that the following passage contains arguments of a strongly defensive character³: "What was our object, Tubero, save that we might have the power that Caesar has now?" But if, when pleading before the emperor or any other person who has power either to acquit or condemn, it is incumbent on us to urge that, while our client has committed an offence that deserves the death penalty, it is still the duty of a merciful judge to spare him despite his sins, it must be noted in the first place that we have to deal, not with our adversary, but with the judge, and secondly that we shall have to employ the deliberative rather than the forensic style. For we shall urge the judge to fix his desire rather on the glory that is won by clemency than on the pleasure that is given by vengeance. On the other hand, when we are pleading before judges who have to give their verdict in accordance with the prescriptions of law, it would be absurd to give them advice as to how they should deal with a criminal who admits his guilt. Consequently, when it is impossible either to deny the facts or to raise the question of competence, we must attempt to justify the facts as best we can, or else throw up the case. I have pointed out that there are two ways in which a fact can be denied: it can be denied absolutely, or it may be denied that a fact is of the nature alleged.

When it is impossible to plead justification or to raise the question of competence,¹ we must deny the facts, and that not merely when a definition of the facts will serve our case, but even when nothing except an absolute denial is left for us. If witnesses are produced, there is much that may be said to discredit them; if a document is put forward, we may hold forth on the similarity of the hand-writings.² In any case there can be no worse course than confession of guilt. When denial and justification are both impossible, we must as a last resort base our defence on the legal point of competence. Still, there are some cases in which none of these three courses is possible. "She is accused of adultery on the ground that after a widowhood of twelve months she was delivered of a child." In this case there is no ground for dispute. Consequently I regard as the height of folly the advice that is given in such cases, that what cannot be defended should be ignored and passed over in silence, at any rate if the point in question is that on which the judge has to give his decision. On the other hand, if the allegation is irrelevant to the actual case and no more than accessory, I should prefer simply to state that it has nothing to do with the question at issue, that it is not worth our attention, and that it has not the importance given to it by our opponent, though in such a case I should be prepared to pardon a policy of ignoring the charge such as I have just mentioned. For a good advocate ought not to be afraid of incurring a trivial censure for negligence, if such apparent negligence is likely to save his client.

We must further consider whether we should attack our opponent's arguments en masse or dispose of them singly. We shall adopt the former course if the arguments are so weak that they can be overthrown simultaneously, or so embarrassing that it would be inexpedient to grapple with them individually. For in such a case we must fight with all the force at our disposal and make a frontal attack. Sometimes, if it is difficult to refute the statements 12 made by our opponents, we may compare our arguments with theirs, at least if by such a procedure it is possible to prove the superiority of our own. On the other hand, those arguments which rely on their cumulative force must be analysed individually, as for example in the case which I cited above: "You were the heir, you were poor and were summoned by your creditors for a large sum: you had offended him and knew that he intended to change his will." The cumulative force of these arguments is dam- 13 aging. But if you refute them singly, the flame which derived its strength from the mass of fuel will die down as soon as the material which fed it is separated, just as if we divert a great stream into a number of channels we may cross it where we will. We shall therefore adapt our method of refutation to the exigencies of our case, now dealing with individual arguments and now treating them in bulk. For at times we may include in a single proposition 14 the refutation of an argument which our opponent has constructed of a number of different points. For instance, if the accuser allege that the accused had a number of motives for committing a crime, we may make a general denial of the fact without dealing singly with each alleged motive, because the fact that a man has had a motive for committing a crime does not prove that he has actually committed it. It will however as a rule be expedient for the prosecution to employ massed arguments, and for the accused to refute them in detail. 15

We must, however, also consider the manner in which we should refute the arguments of our opponent. If his statements be obviously false, it will be sufficient to deny them. This is done by Cicero in the pro Cluentio,¹ where he denies that the man alleged by the accuser to have fallen dead on the spot after drinking the contents of the cup, died on the same day. Again, it requires no skill 16 to rebut arguments which are obviously contradictory, superfluous or foolish, and consequently I need give no examples nor instructions as to the method to be employed. There is also the type of charge which is known as obscure, where it is alleged that an act was committed in secret without witnesses or any evidence to prove it: this suffers from an inherent weakness, since the fact that our opponent can produce no proof is sufficient for our purpose: the same applies to arguments which are irrelevant to the case. It is, however, sometimes an 17 orator's duty to make it appear that some argument of his opponent is contradictory or irrelevant or incredible or superfluous or really favourable to his own client. Oppius² is charged with having embezzled the supplies intended to feed the troops. It is a serious charge, but Cicero shows that it contradicts other charges, since the same accusers also charged Oppius with desiring to corrupt the army by bribes. The accuser of Cornelius offers to 18 produce witnesses to show that he read out the law when tribune³: Cicero makes this argument superfluous by admitting it. Quintus Caecilius demands to be entrusted with the task of accusing Verres on the ground that he had been the latter's quaestor: Cicero actually makes this argument tell in his own favour.¹ As regards other charges, they may all be dealt with by very similar methods. For they may be demolished either by conjecture, when we shall consider whether they are true, by definition, when we shall examine whether they are relevant to the case, by quality, when we shall consider whether they are dishonourable, unfair, scandalous, inhuman, cruel, or deserve any other epithet coming under the head of quality. Such questions have to be considered, not merely in connection with the statement of the charges or the reasons alleged, but with reference to the nature of the case in its entirety. For instance, the question of cruelty is considered with regard to the charge of high treason brought against Rabirius² by Labienus; of inhumanity in the case of Tubero who accused Ligarius when he was an exile and attempted to prevent Caesar from pardoning him; of arrogance as in the case of the charge brought against Oppius³ on the strength of a letter of Cotta. Similarly, it may be shown that charges are hasty, insidious or vindictive. The strongest argument, however, which can be brought against a charge is that it involves peril to the community or to the judges themselves; we find an example of the former in the pro Tullio,⁴ where Cicero says "Who ever laid down such a principle as this, or who could be allowed, without grave peril to the community, to kill a man, just because he asserts that he feared that he himself might be killed by him?" An instance of the latter occurs in the pro Oppio, where Cicero warns the judges at some length not to permit such an action to be brought against the equestrian order.¹ On the other 22 hand there are certain arguments which at times may best be treated with contempt, as being trivial or irrelevant. This course is frequently pursued by Cicero, indeed this affectation of indifference is sometimes carried so far that we trample disdainfully under foot arguments which we should never succeed in refuting by counter-argument.

¹ cp. iv. ii. 131. The speech is lost.

Since, however, the majority of such arguments 23 are based on similarity, we must make diligent search to discover if any discrepancy is to be found in what is put forward. It is easy to do this where points of law are concerned. For the law was drafted to cover cases quite other than the present, and consequently it is all the easier to show the difference between case and case. As to parallels drawn from dumb animals or inanimate objects, they are easy to make light of. Examples drawn from facts, if damag- 24 ing to our case, must be treated in various ways: if they are ancient history, we may call them legendary, while if they are undoubted, we may lay stress on their extreme dissimilarity. For it is impossible for two cases to be alike in every detail. For instance, if the case of Ahala,² by whom Maelius was killed, is quoted to justify Nasica for the slaying of Tiberius Gracchus, we may argue that Maelius was endeavouring to make himself king, while all that Gracchus had done was to bring forward laws in the interest of the people, and that while Ahala was Master of the Horse, Nasica was a private citizen. In the last resort, if all else prove unavailing, we must see if we can show that the action adduced as a parallel was itself unjustifiable. These remarks as to examples apply also to previous decisions in the courts.

With regard to my statement that the manner in 25 which the accuser stated his charges was of importance, I would point out in this connexion that if he has spoken but feebly, we may repeat his actual words; while, if he has used bitter and violent language, we may restate the facts in milder terms, as Cicero does in the pro Cornelio, where he says, "He put his hand to the tablet containing the law"¹: and we may do this in such a way as to 26 defend our client; for instance, if our client is addicted to luxury, we may say, "He has been charged with living in a somewhat too liberal style." So, too, we may call a mean man thrifty and a slanderous tongue free.² But we must never under 27 any circumstances repeat our opponent's charges together with their proofs, nor emphasise any of his points by amplifying them, unless we do so with a view to making light of them, as for instance in the following passage³: "You have been with the army, he says, and have not set foot in the forum for so many years, and do you now on returning after so long an interval seek to compete for a post of high dignity with those who have made the forum their home?" Again, when we are replying to the 28 accuser we may sometimes set forth the whole charge, as Cicero does in the pro Scauro with reference to the death of Bostar,⁴ where he virtually parodies the speech of his opponent, or we may take a number of points raised in the course of the accusation and put them together as in the *pro Vareno*⁵: "They have asserted that, when he was journeying with Pompulenus through a lonely stretch of country, he fell in with the slaves of Ancharius, that Pompulenus was then killed and Varenus imprisoned on the spot until such time as this man should indicate what he wished to be done with him." Such a procedure is useful, if the sequence of facts alleged by the prosecution is incredible, and likely to lose its force by restatement. Sometimes, on the other hand, we may destroy the cumulative force of a number of statements by refuting them singly; in fact this is generally the safest course. Sometimes, again, the different portions of our reply will be independent of one another, a case which requires no illustration.

Common arguments¹ are readily appropriated, not 29 merely because they can be used by either party, but because they are of greater service to the speaker who is replying; for I shall not scruple to repeat the warning which I have often given already; the speaker who is first to employ such an argument makes it tell against himself. For an argument 30 must needs tell against a speaker if it be one which his opponent can use with effect. "But, you say, it is not probable that a crime of this magnitude was designed by Marcus Cotta. Is it probable then that a crime of this magnitude was attempted by Oppius?" On the other hand it is a task for a real artist to discover inconsistencies, real or apparent, in the speech of his opponent, though such inconsistencies are sometimes evident from the bare facts, as for instance in the case of Caelius,² where Clodia asserts on the one hand that she lent Caelius money, which is an indication of great intimacy, and on the other hand that he got poison to murder her, which is a sign of violent hatred. Tubero similarly¹ 31 accuses Ligarius of having been in Africa, and complains that Ligarius refused to allow him to land in Africa. At times, however, some ill-advised statement by our opponent will give us an opportunity of demolishing his arguments. This is specially likely to occur with speakers who have a passion for producing impressive thoughts: for the temptation to air their eloquence is such that they take no heed of what they have said already, being absorbed by the topic immediately before them to the detriment of the interests of the case as a whole. What is there likely to tell so heavily 32 against Cluentius as the stigma inflicted by the censors? What can be more damaging than the fact that Egnatius disinherited his son on the ground that he had been bribed to give a false verdict in the trial in which Cluentius secured the condemnation of Oppianicus? But Cicero² shows that the 33 two facts tell against one another. "But, Attius, I would urge you to give the closest consideration to the following problem. Which do you desire to carry the greater weight—the judgment of the censors, or of Egnatius? If the latter, you regard the judgment of the censors in other cases as counting for little, since they expelled this same Gnaeus Egnatius, on whose authority you lay such stress, from his place in the senate. On the other hand, if you attach most weight to the judgment of the censors, I must point out that the censors retained the younger Egnatius, whom his father disinherited by an act resembling a censorial decision, in his position as senator, although they had expelled his father." As regards errors such as the following, the folly 34

shown in their commission is out of all proportion to the skill required to deal with them: I refer to mistakes such as advancing a disputable argument as indisputable, a controversial point as admitted, a point common to a number of cases as peculiar to the case in hand, or the employment of trite, superfluous, or incredible arguments. For careless speakers are liable to commit a host of errors: they will exaggerate a charge which has still got to be proved, will argue about an act when the question is who committed it, will attempt impossibilities, drop an argument as if it were complete, whereas it is scarcely begun, speak of the individual in preference to the case, and attribute personal faults to circumstances, as for instance if a speaker should attack the decemvirate instead of Appius. They will also contradict what is obvious, speak ambiguously, lose sight of the main issue of the case, or give replies which have no relation to the charges made. This latter procedure may, it is true, be occasionally employed when we have a bad case which requires to be supported by arguments drawn from matters foreign to the case. The trial of Verres provides an example; when accused of peculation it was alleged that he had shown courage and energy in his defence of Sicily against the pirates. 35

The same rules apply to objections which we may have to meet. But there is one point which requires special attention, since in such cases many speakers fall into two very different faults. For some even in the courts will pass by such objections when raised by their opponents as troublesome and vexatious details, and, contenting themselves with the arguments which they have brought ready-made 36

from their study, will speak as if their opponent did not exist. This error is of course far more common in the schools, for there objections are not merely disregarded, but the subjects for declamation are generally framed in such a way that there is nothing to be said on the opposite side. On the other hand 37 there are some who suffer from excess of zeal, and think it their duty to reply to every word and even every trifling reflexion, a task which is at once endless and superfluous. For it is not the case, but the pleader, whom they are refuting. Personally I should always prefer that a speaker should reveal his eloquence in such a way that, if what he says advances his case, the credit will be given to his talent and not to the nature of his case, while if what he says damages his case the blame will attach to the case and not to his powers. Consequently 38 when we come across denunciations such as that directed against Rullus for the obscurity of his language,¹ or against Piso for his utter incapacity as a speaker,² or against Antony³ for his lack of taste and his complete ignorance both of words and things, we shall give them our sanction as reasonable concessions to passion and just resentment, and as useful in stirring up hatred against those whom it is desired to render unpopular. The method of reply 39 to our opponent's counsel should be on different lines. Sometimes however we are justified in attacking, not merely their manner of speaking, but also their character, their appearance, their gait or bearing. Indeed, in his attack on Quintius, Cicero⁴ does not confine himself to these topics, but even attacks his purple-bordered toga that goes trailing to his heels : for Quintius had caused Cluentius grave embarrassment by his turbulent harangues. Some- 40 times, in order to dispel the unpopularity excited by bitter criticism, the latter may be disposed of by a jest, as for example Cicero disposes of Triarius.

For to the allegation that the pillars destined for the house of Scaurus were carried on waggons through the city streets he replied,¹ "I got my pillars from the quarries of Alba, and had them brought in panniers!" Such tactics are more readily allowed against an accuser, for the duties of counsel for the defence sometimes force him to make such personal attacks. On the other hand there is no objection to 41 complaining of the conduct of the advocates on either side, so long as our complaint follows accepted practice and does not overstep the limits imposed by good manners; I refer to complaints such as that our opponents have abridged, obscured or postponed
the discussion of some point, or with deliberate cunning have avoided discussing it at all. A change 42 in the tactics of defence is also often selected for censure. For example, Attius² in his speech against Cluentius complains that Cicero insists on the letter of the law, and Aeschines³ in his speech against Ctesiphon complains that Demosthenes refuses to consider the legal aspect of the case.

It is however necessary to issue a special warning to declaimers that they should not put forward objections that can easily be met or assume that their opponent is a fool. As it is, owing to our tendency to think that the subject-matter of our speech may be drawn from our own fancy, florid commonplaces and epigrams designed to bring down
the house occur to our minds with the utmost readiness, with the result that we should do well to bear in mind the lines :

“A shrewd retort ! Could it be otherwise ?

A foolish question makes for smart replies.”¹

But such a practice will be fatal in the courts, 43 where we have to answer our opponent and not ourselves. It is said that Accius, when asked why he did not turn advocate in view of the extraordinary skill in making apt replies which his tragedies revealed, replied that in his plays the characters said what he himself wanted them to say, whereas in the courts his adversaries would probably say just what he least wanted them to say. It is therefore 44 ridiculous in exercises which prepare the student for the actual courts to consider what answer can be made before ever giving a thought to what the opposing counsel is likely to say. And a good teacher should commend a pupil no less for his skill in thinking out arguments that may be put forward for the opposite side than in discovering arguments to prove his own case. Again, there is another 45 practice which is always permissible in the schools, but rarely in the courts. For when we speak first as claimants in a real case, how can we raise objections, seeing that our opponent has so far said nothing ? Still, many fall into this error either 46 because they have acquired the habit in declamation or simply owing to a passion for hearing their own voice, thereby affording fine sport to those who reply : for sometimes the latter will remark sarcastically that they never said anything of the kind and have no intention of saying anything so idiotic, and sometimes that they are grateful for the admirable warnings so kindly given by their opponent: but most often they will say, and this is the strongest line that they can take, that their opponent would never have replied to objections which had never been raised had he not realised that these objections were justified and been driven to admit it by his consciousness of the fact. We may find an example 47 of this in the *pro Cluentio*¹ of Cicero: "You have frequently asserted that you are informed that I intend to base my defence on the letter of the law. Really! I suppose that my friends have secretly betrayed me, and that there is one among those whom I believe to be my friends who reports my designs to my opponent. Who gave you this information? Who was the traitor? And to whom did I ever reveal my design? No one, I think, is to blame. It must have been the law itself that told you." But there are some who, not content with raising 48 imaginary objections, develop whole passages on such themes, saying that they know their opponents will say this and will proceed to argue thus and thus. I remember that Vibius Crispus in our own day disposed of this practice very neatly, for he was a humorous fellow with a very pretty wit: "I do not make those objections which you attribute to me," he said, "for what use would it be to make them twice?" Sometimes however it may be possible to put for- 49 ward something not unlike such objections, if some point included by our opponent in the depositions which he produces has been discussed among his advocates²: for then we shall be replying to something which they have said and not to an objection which has been invented by ourselves; or again, this will be possible if the case is of such a nature that we are in a position to state certain definite objections which are absolutely essential to our opponent's case: for instance, if stolen goods have been discovered in a house, the accused must of necessity allege either that they were brought there without his knowledge or deposited with him or given to him; and we may therefore answer all these points even although they have not been put forward. On the 50 other hand, in the schools we are quite justified in answering both statements and imaginary objections; for by these means we shall train ourselves at one and the same time for speaking either first or second. Unless we do this, we shall have no chance of employing objections, since there is no adversary to whom we can reply.

There is another serious fault into which pleaders 51 fall: the anxious over-elaboration of points. Such a procedure makes his case suspect to the judges, while frequently arguments which, if stated without more ado, would have removed all doubt, lose their force owing to the delay caused by the elaborate preparations made for their introduction, due to the fact that the advocate thinks that they require additional support. Our orator must therefore adopt a confident manner, and should always speak as if he thought his case admirable. This quality, like all 52 other good qualities, is particularly evident in Cicero. For the extraordinary care which he takes gives the impression of confidence and carries such weight when he speaks that it does not permit us to feel the least doubt and has all the force of genuine proof. Further, the advocate who knows what are the strongest points in his own and his opponent's case will easily be able to decide what points it will be most necessary for him to emphasise or to counter.

As regards order, there is no part of a case which involves less trouble. For, if we are prosecuting, our first duty will be to prove our own case, our second to refute the arguments brought against it. If, on the other hand, we are defending, we must begin by refutation. But from our answers to objections fresh objections will arise, a process which may be carried to some length.¹ The strokes of gladiators provide a parallel. If the first stroke was intended to provoke the adversary to strike, the second will lead to the third, while if the challenge be repeated it will lead to the fourth stroke, so that there will be two parries and two attacks. And the process may be prolonged still further. But refutation also includes that simple form of proof, which I described above,² based on an appeal to the emotions and mere assertion; for an example see the words of Scaurus which I have already quoted.³ Nay, I am not sure that this form of proof is not actually of more frequent occurrence when something is denied. It is, however, specially important for both parties that they should see where the main issue lies. For it often happens that the points raised in pleading are many, although those on which a decision is given are few.

Such are the elements of the methods of proof and refutation, but they require to be embellished and supported by the powers of the speaker. For although our arguments may be admirably adapted to express what we desire, they will none the less be slight and weak unless the orator makes a special effort to give them life. Consequently the common-places on the subject of witnesses, documentary evidence, arguments and the like make a great impression on the minds of the judges, as also do those topics which are peculiar to the case, those I mean in which we praise or blame any action or show that it is just or unjust, or make it seem more or less important or more or less harsh than it really is. Of these topics some are adapted to the comparison of individual arguments, others to the comparison of a number, while others may serve to influence the success or failure of the whole case. Some again prepare the mind of the judge, while 58 others confirm it in opinions already formed. But such preparation or confirmation will sometimes apply to the whole case, sometimes only to particular portions, and must therefore be employed with due regard to circumstances. I am 59 consequently surprised that there should be a violent dispute between the leaders of two opposite schools as to whether such commonplaces should be applied to individual questions (which is the view of Theodorus), or whether the judge should be instructed in the facts before any appeal is made to his feelings (the latter being the view of Apollodorus), as though no middle course were possible and no regard were to be had to the exigencies of the case itself. Those who lay down such rules have no experience of speaking in the actual courts, the result being that text-books composed in the calm leisure of the study are sadly upset by the necessities of forensic strife. For practically all those 60 who have set forth the law of speaking as though it were a profound mystery,¹ have tied us down not merely to fixed topics for argument, but to definite rules as to how we should draw our conclusions. I propose after making a few preliminary remarks on the subject to give a frank expression of my own views, or in other words to set forth what I perceive to have been the practice of the most distinguished orators.

XIV. The term *enthymeme*¹ is applied not merely to the actual argument, that is to say, the matter adduced to prove something else, but also to its expression, the nature of which, as I have already pointed out, is twofold.² It may be drawn from denial of consequents, when it will consist of a proposition immediately followed by a proof, as in the following passage from the *pro Ligario*³; "At that point the justice of the cause was doubtful, since there was something to be said on both sides. But now we can only regard that cause as superior, which even the gods supported." Here we have a proposition and a reason, but no formal conclusion: it is therefore the incomplete syllogism known as an enthymeme.² It may on the other hand be drawn from incompatibles, in which case the proof will be much stronger; indeed some restrict the title of *enthymeme*⁴ to this form of argument. The following passage from the *pro Milone*⁵ of Cicero will provide a parallel: "You are then sitting there to avenge the death of a man whom you would refuse to restore to life, even if you thought it within your power to do so." This form³ of argument may even at times consist of a number of clauses, as in the following passage from the same speech⁶: "Was he resolved then to kill to the dissatisfaction of some a man whom he refused to kill to the satisfaction of all? Are we to believe that he did not hesitate, in defiance of the law and despite the unfavourable circumstances both of time and place and the risk involved to his own life, to kill one whom he did not venture to kill when he might have done so legally, at his own time and place and without the least danger to himself?" The 4 most effective kind of enthymeme seems however to be that in which a reason is subjoined to a dissimilar or contrary proposition as in the following passage from Demosthenes¹: "For if at any time an act has been committed contrary to law and you have imitated it, it does not therefore follow that you should go scot free; on the contrary it is an additional reason why you should be condemned. For if any of those who transgressed the law had been condemned, you would not have proposed this, and further, if you are condemned, no one else will propose anything of the kind."

As regards the epicheireme, some authorities hold 5 that it consists of four, five, and even six parts. Cicero² urges that there are not more than five at most, i.e. the major premise and its reason, the minor premise and its proof, and fifthly the conclusion. { 6 But since at times the major premise does not require a reason nor the minor a proof, while occasionally even the conclusion is not necessary, he holds that the epicheireme may consist of only four, three, or even two parts. Personally however 6 I follow the majority of authorities in holding that there are not more than three parts. For it follows from the very nature of reasoning that there must be something to form the subject of enquiry and something else to provide the proof, while the third element which has to be added may be regarded as resulting from the agreement of the two previous elements. Thus the first part will be the major, the second the minor premise and the third the conclusion. For the confirmation and development of both premises may reasonably be included in the parts to which they belong. Let us then take 7 an example from Cicero¹ of the epicheireme consisting of five parts. "Those things which are controlled by reason are better governed than those which are not." This they call the first part and consider that it requires to be established by various reasons and a copious display of eloquence. Personally I hold that the whole of this together with its reason forms but one part. Otherwise, if the reason is to be treated as a separate part and if there are a variety of reasons, this will involve an addition to the number of parts. Next he produces the minor premise: 8 "But there is nothing better administered than the universe." The proof of this minor premise is treated as the fourth part of the epicheireme. My criticism of this statement is identical with my criticism of the preceding. The fifth place they 9 assign to the conclusion which either merely makes the necessary inference from the preceding parts (i.e. "Therefore the universe is governed by reason") or after briefly bringing major and minor premise together adds what is deduced from them with the following result: "But if on the one hand things that are controlled by reason are better governed than things which are not and on the other nothing is better administered than the universe; then it follows that the universe is governed by reason." As regards this part of the epicheireme I agree.

I have said that the epicheireme consists of three 10 parts: its form is not however invariable. There is firstly the form in which the conclusion is identical with what has already been stated in the major premise. "The soul is immortal, since whatever derives its motion from itself is immortal. But the soul derives its motion from itself. Therefore the soul is immortal." This process occurs not merely in individual arguments, but in whole cases, provided they are of a simple character, and also in questions.¹ For cases and questions always have first a major 11 premise, such as "You have committed sacrilege," or "Not everyone who has killed a man is guilty of murder." Second comes a reason, which is stated at greater length in cases and questions than in separate arguments, while finally comes the conclusion in which as a rule they set forth the point they have proved either by enumeration of particulars or in the form of a hasty conclusion. In this type of epicheireme the major premise is doubtful, since it is still under investigation. There is another 12 form of conclusion which is not actually identical with the major premise, but has the same force "Death is nothing to us, for that which is dissolved into its elements is devoid of feeling, and that which is devoid of feeling is nothing to us." There is a third form in which the major premise and the conclusion are different. "All animate things are better than inanimate, but there is nothing better than the universe, wherefore the universe is animate." It may be thought that in this case there is no real major premise, since it would be possible to state the reasoning in the following form: "The universe is animate, for all things animate are better than inanimate," etcetera. This major premise is either 13 an admitted fact as in the last example or requires to be proved as in the following: "He who wishes to live a happy life, must be a philosopher": for this is not an acknowledged truth, and the premises must be established before we can arrive at the conclusion. Sometimes again the minor premise is an admitted fact, as for instance, "But all men wish to live a happy life," while sometimes it requires to be proved, as for example the statement quoted above, "That which is dissolved into its elements is devoid of feeling," since it is doubtful whether the soul is immortal after its release from the body or only continues to exist for a time. Some call this a minor premise, some a reason.

There is no difference between the epicheireme and the sylogism, except that the latter has a number of forms and infers truth from truth, whereas the epicheireme is frequently concerned with statements that are no more than credible. For if it were always possible to prove controversial points from admitted premises, the orator would have little to do in this connexion. For what skill does it require to say, "The property is mine, for I am the only son of the deceased," or "I am the sole heir, since possession of the testator's estate is given by the law of property in accordance with the terms of his will: the property therefore belongs to me"? But when the reason given is itself disputable, we must establish the certainty of the premises by which we are proposing to prove what is uncertain. For example, if our opponent says "You are not his son" or "You are illegitimate" or "You are not his only son"; or, again, "You are not his heir" or "The will is invalid" or "You are not entitled to inherit" or "You have co-heirs," we must prove the validity of the reason on which we base our claim that the property should be adjudicated to us. But when 17 a reason of unusual length intervenes, it is necessary to state the final conclusion, otherwise the major premise and the reason would suffice. "Laws are silent in the midst of arms, and do not require us to await their sanction when the circumstances are such that he who would await their sanction is certain to be the victim of an unjust penalty before ever the just penalty can be claimed." ¹ Hence it has been asserted that the form of enthymeme which is based on denial of consequents resembles a reason. But sometimes, again, it is sufficient to state a single proposition as in the example just quoted, "The laws are silent in the midst of arms." We may also begin 18 with the reason and then proceed to the conclusion as in another passage from the same speech ²: "But if the Twelve Tables permitted the killing of a thief by night under any circumstances, and by day if he used a weapon to defend himself, who is there who will contend that the slayer must be punished under whatever circumstances a man has been killed?" The process is still further varied by Cicero, and the reason placed third, as in the phrase, "When he sees that the sword is sometimes placed in our hands by the laws themselves." On the other hand, he 19 places the various parts in the regular order in the following instance: "How can it be unjust to kill a robber who lies in wait for his victim?" ³ Next comes the reason: "What is the object of our escorts and our swords?" Last comes the conclusion resulting from the major premise and the reason: "Which we certainly should not be permitted to have, if we were absolutely forbidden to use them."

This form of proof may be countered in three 20 ways, that is to say it may be attacked in all its parts. For either the major premise or the minor or the conclusion or occasionally all three are refuted. The major premise is refuted in the following case: "I was justified in killing him, as he lay in wait for me." For the very first question in the defence of Milo is "whether it is right that he who confesses that he has killed a man should look upon the light of day." The minor premise is refuted by all the 21 methods which we mentioned in dealing with refutation.¹ As to the reason it must be pointed out that it is sometimes true when the proposition to which it is attached is not true, but may on the other hand sometimes be false although the proposition is true. For example, "Virtue is a good thing" is true, but if the reason, "Because it brings us wealth," be added, we shall have an instance of a true major premise and a false reason. With regard to the 22 conclusion, we may either deny its truth when it infers something which does not logically result from the premises, or we may treat it as irrelevant. The truth is denied in the following case: "We are justified in killing one who lies in wait for us; for since, like an enemy, he threatens us with violence, we ought to repulse his attack as though he were an enemy: therefore Milo was justified in killing Clodius as an enemy." The conclusion is not valid, since we have not yet proved that Clodius lay in wait for him. But the conclusion that we are therefore justified in killing one who lies in wait for us is perfectly true, though irrelevant to the case, for it is not yet clear that Clodius lay in wait for Milo. But while the major premise and the reason 23 may both be true and the conclusion false, yet if both are false, the conclusion can never be true.

Some call the enthymeme a rhetorical syllogism, while 24 others regard it as a part of the syllogism, because whereas the latter always has its premises and conclusion and effects its proof by the employment of all its parts, the enthymeme is content to let its proof be understood without explicit statement. The 25 following is an example of a syllogism: "Virtue is the only thing that is good, for that alone is good which no one can put to a bad use: but no one can make a bad use of virtue; virtue therefore is good." The enthymeme draws its conclusion from denial of 26 consequents. "Virtue is a good thing because no one can put it to a bad use." On the other hand take the following syllogism. "Money is not a good thing; for that is not good which can be put to a bad use: money may be put to a bad use; therefore money is not a good thing." The enthymeme draws its conclusion from incompatibles. "Can money be a good thing when it is possible to put it to a bad use?" The following argument is couched 26 in syllogistic form: "If money in the form of silver coin is silver, the man who bequeathes all his silver to a legatee, includes all money in the form of coined silver: but he bequeathed all his silver: therefore he included in the bequest all money in the form of coined silver." But for the orator it will be sufficient to say, "Since he bequeathed all his silver, he included in his bequest all his silver money."

I think I have now dealt with all the precepts of 27 those who treat oratory as a mystery. But these rules still leave scope for free exercise of the judgment. For although I consider that there are occasions when the orator may lawfully employ the syllogism, I am far from desiring him to make his whole speech consist of or even be crowded with a mass of epicheiremes and enthymemes. For a speech of that character would resemble dialogues and dialectical controversies rather than pleadings of the kind with which we are concerned, and there is an enormous difference between the two. For in the former we 28 are confronted with learned men seeking for truth among men of learning; consequently they subject everything to a minute and scrupulous inquiry with a view to arriving at clear and convincing truths, and they claim for themselves the tasks of invention and judgment, calling the former τοπική or the art of selecting the appropriate material for treatment, and the latter κριτική or the art of criticism. We on the other hand have to compose our 29 speeches for others to judge, and have frequently to speak before an audience of men who, if not thoroughly ill-educated, are certainly ignorant of such arts as dialectic: and unless we attract them by the ~~charm~~ of our discourse or drag them by its force, and occasionally throw them off their balance by an appeal to their emotions, we shall be unable to vindicate the claims of truth and justice. Elo- 30 quence aims at being rich, beautiful and commanding, and will attain to none of these qualities if it be broken up into conclusive inferences which are generally expressed in the same monotonous form: on the contrary its meanness will excite contempt, its severity dislike, its elaboration satiety, and its sameness boredom. Eloquence therefore must not restrict 31 itself to narrow tracks, but range at large over the open fields. Its streams must not be conveyed through narrow pipes like the water of fountains, but flow as mighty rivers flow, filling whole valleys; and if it cannot find a channel it must make one for itself. For what can be more distressing than to be fettered by petty rules, like children who trace the letters of the alphabet which others have first written for them, or, as the Greeks say, insist on keeping the coat their mother gave them.¹ Are we to have nothing but premises and conclusions from consequents and incompatibles? Must not the orator breathe life into the argument and develop it? Must he not vary and diversify it by a 32 thousand figures, and do all this in such a way that it seems to come into being as the very child of nature, not to reveal an artificial manufacture and a suspect art nor at every moment to show traces of an instructor's hand? What orator ever spoke thus? Even in Demosthenes we find but few traces of such a mechanism. And yet the Greeks of to-day are even more prone than we are (though this is the only point in which their practice is worse than ours) to bind their thoughts in fetters and to connect them by an inexorable chain of argument, making inferences where there was never any doubt, proving admitted facts and asserting that in so doing they are following the orators of old, although they always refuse to answer the question who it is that they are imitating. However of figures I shall speak elsewhere.²

For the present I must add that I do not even 33 agree with those who hold that arguments should always be expressed in language which is not only pure, lucid and distinct, but also as free as possible from all elevation and ornateness. I readily admit that arguments should be distinct and clear, and further that in arguments of a minor character the language and words should be as appropriate and as familiar as possible. But if the subject be one of real importance every kind of ornament should be employed, so long as it does nothing to obscure our meaning. For metaphor will frequently throw a flood of light upon a subject: even lawyers, who spend so much trouble over the appropriateness of words, venture to assert that the word litus is derived from eludere, because the shore is a place where the waves break in play. Further, the more unattractive the natural appearance of anything, the more does it require to be seasoned by charm of style: moreover, an argument is often less suspect when thus disguised, and the charm with which it is expressed makes it all the more convincing to our audience. Unless indeed we think that Cicero was in error when he introduced phrases such as the following into an argumentative passage: "The laws are silent in the midst of arms," and "A sword is sometimes placed in our hands by the laws themselves." However, we must be careful to observe a ~~happy mean~~ in the employment of such embellishments, so that they may prove a real ornament and not a hindrance.

BOOK VI

PREFACE

I UNDERTOOK my present task, Marcellus Victorius, mainly to gratify your request,¹ but also with a view to assist the more earnest of our young men as far as lay in my power, while latterly the energy with which I have devoted myself to my labours has been inspired by the almost imperative necessity imposed by the office conferred on me,² though all the while I have had an eye to my own personal pleasure. For I thought that this work would be the most precious part of the inheritance that would fall to my son, whose ability was so remarkable that it called for the most anxious cultivation on the part of his father. Thus if, as would have been but just and devoutly to be wished, the fates had torn me from his side, ~~he~~ he would still have been able to enjoy the benefit of his father's instruction. Night and day I pursued ² this design, and strove to hasten its completion ~~in~~ the fear that death might cut me off with my task unfinished, when misfortune overwhelmed me with such suddenness, that the success of my labours now interests no one less than myself. A second bereavement has fallen upon me, and I have lost him of whom I had formed the highest expectations, and in whom I reposed all the hopes that should solace my old age. What is there left for me to do? Or ³

BOOK VI. PR. 3-6

what further use can I hope to be on earth, when heaven thus frowns upon me? For it so chanced that just at the moment when I began my book on the causes of the decline of eloquence, I was stricken by a like affliction. Better had I thrown that ill-omened work and all my ill-starred learning upon the flames of that untimely pyre that was to consume
 the darling of my heart, and had not sought to burden my unnatural persistence in this wicked world with the fatigue of fresh labours! For what 4 father with a spark of proper feeling would pardon
 me for having the heart to pursue my researches
 further, and would not hate me for my insensibility, had I other use for my voice than to rail against high heaven for having suffered me to outlive all my nearest and dearest, and to testify that providence deigns not at all to watch over this earth of ours? If this is not proved by my own misfortune (and yet my only fault is that I still live), it is most surely manifest in theirs, who were cut off thus untimely; their mother was taken from me earlier still, she had borne me two sons ere the completion of her nineteenth year; but for her, though she too died most untimely, death was a blessing. Yet for me her 5 death alone was such a blow that thereafter no good fortune could bring me true happiness. For she had every virtue that is given to woman to possess, and left her husband a prey to irremediable grief; nay, so young was she when death took her, that if her age be compared with mine, her decease was like the loss not merely of a wife, but of a daughter.
 Still her children survived her, and I, too, lived on 6
 by some unnatural ordinance of fate, which for all its perversity was what she herself desired; and thus by her swift departure from this life she escaped the worst of tortures. My youngest boy was barely five, when he was the first to leave me, robbing me as it were of one of my two eyes. I have no desire 7 to flaunt my woes in the public gaze, nor to exaggerate the cause I have for tears; would that I had some means to make it less! But how can I forget the charm of his face, the sweetness of his speech, his first flashes of promise, and his actual possession of a calm and, incredible though it may seem, a powerful mind. Such a child would have captivated my affections, even had he been another's. Nor was 8 this all; to enhance my agony the malignity of designing fortune had willed that he should devote all his love to me, preferring me to his nurses, to his grandmother who brought him up, and all those who, as a rule, win the special affection of infancy. I am, therefore, grateful to the grief that came to 9 me some few months before his loss in the death of his mother, the best of women, whose virtues were beyond all praise. For I have less reason to weep my own fate than to rejoice at hers.

After these calamities all my hopes, all my delight were centred on my little Quintilian, and he might have sufficed to console me. For his gifts were not 10 merely in the bud like those of his brother: as early as his ninth birthday he had put forth sure and well-formed fruit. By my own sorrows, by the testimony of my own sad heart, by his departed spirit, the deity at whose shrine my grief does worship, I swear that I discerned in him such talent, not merely in receiving instruction, although in all my wide experience I have never seen his like, nor in his power of spontaneous application, to which his teachers can bear witness, but such upright, pious, humane and generous feelings, as alone might have sufficed to fill me with the dread of the fearful thunder-stroke that has smitten me down: for it is a matter of common observation that those who ripen early die young, and that there is some malign influence that delights in cutting short the greatest promise and refusing to permit our joys to pass beyond the bound allotted to mortal man. He 11 possessed every incidental advantage as well, a pleasing and resonant voice, a sweetness of speech,

 and a perfect correctness in pronouncing every letter both in Greek and Latin, as though either were his native tongue. But all these were but the promise of greater things. He had finer qualities, courage and dignity, and the strength to resist both fear and pain. What fortitude he showed during an illness of eight months, till all his physicians marvelled at him! How he consoled me during his last moments. How even in the wanderings of delirium did his thoughts recur to his lessons and his literary studies, even when his strength was sinking and he was no longer ours to claim! Child of my vain 12 hopes, did I see your eyes fading in death and your breath take its last flight? Had I the heart to receive your fleeting spirit,¹ as I embraced your cold
 pale body, and to live on breathing the common air.
 Justly do I endure the agony that now is mine, and the thoughts that torment me. Have I lost you at 13
 the moment when adoption by a consular had given hope that you would rise to all the high offices of state, when you were destined to be the son-in-law of your uncle the praetor, and gave promise of rivalling the eloquence of your grandsire? and do I

BOOK VI. PR. 13-16

your father survive only to weep? May my endurance (not my will to live, for that is gone from me) prove me worthy of you through all my remaining years. For it is in vain that we impute all our ills to fortune. (No man grieves long save through his own fault.) But I still live, and must find something 14 to make life tolerable, and must needs put faith in the verdict of the wise, who held that literature alone can provide true solace in adversity. Yet, if ever the violence of my present grief subside and admit the intrusion of some other thought on so many sorrowful reflexions, I may with good cause ask pardon for the delay in bringing my work to completion. Who can wonder that my studies have been interrupted, when the real marvel is that they have not been broken off altogether? Should 15 certain portions therefore betray a lack of finish compared with what was begun in the days when my affliction was less profound, I would ask that the imperfections should be regarded with indulgence, as being due to the cruel tyranny of fortune, which, if it has not utterly extinguished, has at any rate weakened such poor powers of intellect as I once possessed. But for this very reason I must rouse myself to face my task with greater spirit, since it is easy to despise fortune, though it may be hard to bear her blows. For there is nothing left that she can do to me, since out of my calamities she has wrought for me a security which, full of sorrow though it be, is such that nothing can shake it. And the very fact that I have no personal interest 16 in persevering with my present work, but am moved solely by the desire to serve others, if indeed anything that I write can be of such service, is a reason for regarding my labours with an indulgent eye. Alas! I shall bequeath it, like my patrimony, for others than those to whom it was my design to leave it.

I. The next subject which I was going to discuss was the peroration which some call the completion and others the conclusion. There are two kinds of peroration, for it may deal either with facts or with the emotional aspect of the case. The repetition and grouping of the facts, which the Greeks call ἀνακεφαλαίωσις and some of our own writers call the enumeration, serves both to refresh the memory of the judge and to place the whole of the case before his eyes, and, even although the facts may have made little impression on him in detail, their cumulative effect is considerable. This final recapitulation must be as brief as possible and, as the Greek term indicates, we must summarise the facts under the appropriate heads. For if we devote too much time thereto, the peroration will cease to be an enumeration and will constitute something very like a second speech. On the other hand the points selected for enumeration must be treated with weight and dignity, enlivened by apt reflexions and diversified by suitable figures; for there is nothing more tiresome than a dry repetition of facts, which merely suggests a lack of confidence in the judges' memory. There are however innumerable ways in which this may be done. The finest example is provided by Cicero's prosecution of Verres.¹ "If your own father were among your judges, what would he say when these facts were proved against you?" Then follows the enumeration. Another admirable example¹ may be found in the same speech where the enumeration of the temples which the praetor had despoiled takes the form of invoking the various deities concerned. We may also at times pretend to be in doubt whether we have not omitted something and to wonder what the accused will say in reply to certain points or what hope the accuser can have after the manner in which we have refuted all the charges brought against us. But the most attractive form of peroration is 4 that which we may use when we have an opportunity of drawing some argument from our opponent's speech, as for instance when we say "He omitted to deal with this portion of the case," or "He preferred to crush us by exciting odium against us," or "He had good reason for resorting to entreaty, since he knew certain facts." But I must refrain from deal- 5 ing with the various methods individually, for fear that the instances that I produce should be regarded as exhaustive, whereas our opportunities spring from the nature of the particular case, from the statements of our opponents and also from fortuitous circumstances. Nor must we restrict ourselves to recapitulating the points of our own speech, but must call upon our opponent to reply to certain questions. This however is only possible if there is time for him 6 to do so and if the arguments which we have put forward are such as not to admit of refutation. For to challenge points which tell in our opponent's favour is not to argue against him, but to play the part of prompter to him. The majority of Athenians 7 and almost all philosophers who have left anything in writing on the art of oratory have held that the recapitulation is the sole form of peroration. I imagine that the reason why the Athenians did so was that appeals to the emotions were forbidden to Athenian orators, a proclamation to this effect being actually made by the court-usher.¹ I am less surprised at the philosophers taking this view, for they regard susceptibility to emotion as a vice, and think it immoral that the judge should be distracted from the truth by an appeal to his emotions and that it is unbecoming for a good man to make use of vicious procedure to serve his ends. None the less they must admit that appeals to emotion are necessary if there are no other means for securing the victory of truth, justice and the public interest. It 8 is however admitted by all that recapitulation may be profitably employed in other portions of the speech as well, if the case is complicated and a number of different arguments have been employed in the defence; though no one will doubt but that there are many cases, in which no recapitulation at all is necessary at any point, assuming, that is, that the cases are both brief and simple. This part of the peroration is common both to the prosecution and the defence.

BOOK VI. 1. 3-7

BOOK VI. 1. 7-9

Both parties as a general rule may likewise employ the appeal to the emotions, but they will appeal to different emotions and the defender will employ such appeals with greater frequency and fulness. For the accuser has to rouse the judge, while the defender has to soften him. Still even the accuser will sometimes make his audience weep by the pity excited for the man whose wrongs he seeks to avenge, while the defendant will at times develop no small vehemence when he complains of the injustice of the calumny or conspiracy of which he is the victim. It will therefore be best to treat these duties separately: as I have already said,¹ they are much the same in the peroration as in the exordium, but are freer and wider in scope in the former. For our attempts to sway the judges are made more sparingly at the commencement of the speech, when it is enough that such an attempt should gain admittance and we have the whole speech before us. On the other hand in the peroration we have to consider what the feelings of the judge will be when he retires to consider his verdict, for we shall have no further opportunity to say anything and cannot any longer reserve arguments to be produced later. It is therefore the duty of both parties to seek to win the judge's goodwill and to divert it from their opponent, as also to excite or assuage his emotions. And the following brief rule may be laid down for the observation of both parties, that the orator should display the full strength of his case before the eyes of the judge, and, when he has made up his mind what points in his case actually deserve or may seem to deserve to excite envy, goodwill, dislike or pity, should dwell on those points by which he himself would be most moved were he trying the case. But it will be safer to discuss these considerations in detail.

The points likely to commend the accuser to the judge have already been stated in my remarks on the exordium.² There are however certain things which require fuller treatment in the peroration than in the exordium, where it is sufficient merely to outline them. This fuller treatment is specially required if the accused be a man of violent, unpopular or dangerous character or if the condemnation of the accused is likely to cover the judges with glory or his acquittal with disgrace. Calvus for 13 example in his speech against Vatinius makes an admirable remark: "You know, gentlemen, that bribery has been committed and everybody knows that you know it." Cicero again in the *Verrines*¹ says that the ill-name acquired by the courts may be effaced by the condemnation of Verres, a statement that comes under the head of the conciliatory methods mentioned above. The appeal to fear also, if it is necessary to employ it to produce a like effect, occupies a more prominent place in the peroration than in the exordium, but I have expressed my views on this subject in an earlier book.² The peroration 14 also provides freer opportunities for exciting the passions of jealousy, hatred or anger. As regards the circumstances likely to excite such feelings in the judge, jealousy will be produced by the influence of the accused, hatred by the disgraceful nature of his conduct, and anger by his disrespectful attitude to the court, if, for instance, he be contumacious, arrogant or studiously indifferent: such anger may be aroused not merely by specific acts or words, but by his looks, bearing and manner. In this connexion the remark made by the accuser of Cossutianus Capito³ in my young days was regarded with great approval: the words used were Greek, but may be translated thus:—"You blush to fear even Caesar." The best way however for the accuser to excite the 15 feelings of the judge is to make the charge which he brings against the accused seem as atrocious or, if feasible, as deplorable as possible. Its atrocity may be enhanced by considerations of the nature of the act, the position of its author or the victim, the purpose, time, place and manner of the act: all of which may be treated with infinite variety. Suppose 16 that we are complaining that our client has been beaten. We must first speak of the act itself; we shall then proceed to point out that the victim was an old man, a child, a magistrate, an honest man or a benefactor to the state; we shall also point out that the assailant was a worthless and contemptible fellow, or (to take the opposite case) was in a position of excessive power or was the last man who should have given the blow, or again that the occasion was a solemn festival, or that the act was committed at a time when such crimes were punished with special severity by the courts or when public order was at a dangerously low ebb. Again the hatred excited by the act will be enhanced if it was committed in the theatre, in a temple, or at a public assembly, and if the blow was given not 17 in mistake or in a moment of passion or, if it was the result of passion which was quite unjustifiable, being due to the fact that the victim had gone to the assistance of his father or had made some reply or was a candidate for the same office as his assailant; or finally we may hint that he wished to inflict more serious injury than he succeeded in inflicting. But it is the manner of the act that contributes most to the impression of its atrocity, if, for example, the blow was violent or insulting: thus Demosthenes¹ seeks to excite hatred against Midias by emphasising the position of the blow, the attitude of the assailant and the expression of his face. It is in this connexion that we shall 18 have to consider whether a man was killed by sword or fire or poison, by one wound or several, and whether he was slain on the spot or tortured by being kept in suspense. The accuser will also frequently attempt to excite pity by complaining of the fate of the man whom he is seeking to avenge or of the desolation which has fallen upon his children or parents. The judges may also be moved by drawing a picture of the future, of the fate which awaits those who have complained of violence and wrong, if they fail to secure justice. They must go into exile, give up their property or endure to the end whatever their enemy may choose to inflict upon them. But it will more frequently be the duty of the accuser to divert the judge from all the temptations to pity which the accused will place before him, and to incite him to give a strong and dispassionate verdict. It will also be his duty in this connexion to forestall the arguments and actions to which his opponent seems likely to have recourse. For it makes the judge more cautious in observing the sanctity of his oath and destroys the influence of those who are going to reply to us when the arguments used by the defence have already been dealt with by the prosecution, since they lose their novelty. An instance of this will be found in the speech of Messala against Aufidia,¹ where he warns Servius Sulpicius not to talk about the peril which threatens the signatories to the document and the defendant herself. Again Aeschines² foretells the line of defence which Demosthenes will pursue. There are also occasions when the judges should be told what answer they should make to requests on behalf of the accused, a proceeding which is a form of recapitulation.

BOOK VI. I. 12-15

BOOK VI. L. 15-18

If we turn to the defendant, we must note that 21

his worth, his manly pursuits, the scars from wounds received in battle, his rank and the services rendered by his ancestors, will all commend him to the goodwill of the judges. Cicero,¹ as I have already pointed out, and Asinius both make use of this form of appeal : indeed they may almost be regarded as rivals in this respect, since Cicero employed it when defending the elder Scaurus, Asinius when defending the son. Again, the cause which has brought 22 the accused into peril may serve to produce the same effect, if, for example, it appears that he has incurred enmity on account of some honourable action : above all his goodness, humanity or pity may be emphasised with this end in view. For it adds to the apparent justice of his claim, if all that he asks of the judge is that he should grant to him what he himself has granted to others. We may also in this connexion lay stress on the interests of the state, the glory which will accrue to the judges, the importance of the precedent which their verdict will set and the place it will hold in the memory of after generations. But the appeal which will carry 23 most weight is the appeal to pity, which not merely forces the judge to change his views, but even to betray his emotion by tears. Such appeals to pity will be based either on the previous or present sufferings of the accused, or on those which await him if condemned. And the force of our appeal will be doubled if we contrast the fortune which he now enjoys with that to which he will be reduced, if he fail. In this connexion great play may be made by 24 reference to the age and sex of the accused, or to his nearest and dearest, that is, his children, parents and kindred, all of which topics are treated in different ways. Sometimes the advocate himself may even assume the role of close intimacy with his client, as Cicero does in the pro Milone,¹ where he cries: "Alas, unhappy that I am! Alas, my unfortunate friend! You succeeded by the agency of those who are now your judges in recalling me to my native land, and cannot I through the same agency retain you in yours?" Such a method is especially serviceable when, as was the case with Milo, entreaty is not in keeping with the character of the accused. Who would have endured to hear 25 Milo pleading for his life, when he admitted that he had killed a man of noble birth because it was his duty to do so? Consequently Cicero sought to win the judges' goodwill for Milo by emphasising the staunchness of his character, and himself assumed the role of suppliant.

Impersonation may also be employed with profit in such passages, and by impersonations I mean fictitious speeches supposed to be uttered, such as an advocate puts into the mouth of his client. The bare facts are no doubt moving in themselves; but when we pretend that the persons concerned themselves are speaking, the personal note adds to the emotional effect. For then the judge seems no 26 longer to be listening to a voice bewailing another's ills, but to hear the voice and feelings of the unhappy victims, men whose appearance alone would call forth his tears even though they uttered never a word. And as their plea would awaken yet greater pity if they urged it with their own lips, so it is rendered to some extent all the more effective when it is, as it were, put into their mouth by their advocate: we may draw a parallel from the stage, where the actor's voice and delivery produce greater emotional effect when he is speaking in an assumed role than when he speaks in his own character. Consequently Cicero, to quote him once again, 27 although he will not put entreaties into Milo's mouth, and prefers to commend him by his staunchness of character, still lends him words in the form of such complaint as may become a brave man.¹ "Alas!" he says, "my labours have been in vain! Alas for my blighted hopes! Alas for my baffled purpose!"

Appeals to pity should, however, always be brief, and there is good reason for the saying that nothing dries so quickly as tears.² Time assuages even 28 genuine grief, and it is therefore inevitable that the semblance of grief portrayed in our speech should vanish yet more rapidly. And if we spend too much time over such portrayal our hearer grows weary of his tears, takes a breathing space, and returns once more to the rational attitude from which he has been distracted by the impulse of the moment. We 29 must not, therefore, allow the effect which we have produced to fall flat, and must consequently abandon our appeal to the emotion just when that emotion is at its height, nor must we expect anyone to weep for long over another's ills. For this reason our eloquence ought to be pitched higher in this portion of our speech than in any other, since, wherever it fails to add something to what has preceded, it seems even to diminish its previous effect, while a diminuendo is merely a step towards the rapid disappearance of the emotion.

Actions as well as words may be employed to 30 move the court to tears. Hence the custom of bringing accused persons into court wearing squalid and unkempt attire, and of introducing their children and parents, and it is with this in view that we see blood-stained swords, fragments of bone taken from the wound, and garments spotted with blood, displayed by the accusers, wounds stripped of their dressings, and scourged bodies bared to view. The impression produced by such exhibitions is generally enormous, since they seem to bring the spectators face to face with the cruel facts. For example, the sight of the bloodstains on the purple-bordered toga of Gaius Caesar, which was carried at the head of his funeral procession, aroused the Roman people to fury. They knew that he had been killed; they had even seen his body stretched upon the bier: but his garment, still wet with his blood, brought such a vivid image of the crime before their minds, that Caesar seemed not to have been murdered, but to be being murdered before their very eyes. Still I would not for this reason go so far as to approve a practice of which I have read, and which indeed I have occasionally witnessed, of bringing into court a picture of the crime painted on wood or canvas, that the judge might be stirred to fury by the horror of the sight. For the pleader who prefers a voiceless picture to speak for him in place of his own eloquence must be singularly incompetent. On the other hand, I know that the wearing of mourning and the presentation of an unkempt appearance, and the introduction of relatives similarly arrayed, has proved of value, and that entreaties have been of great service to save the accused from condemnation. The practice therefore of appealing to the judges by all that is near and dear to them will be of great service to the accused, especially if he, too, has children, a wife and parents. Invocation of the gods, again, usually gives the impression that the speaker is conscious of the justice of his cause, while it may produce a good effect if the accused throws himself on the ground and embraces the knees of the judges, unless his character, his past life and station prohibit a resort to this device: for there are some acts which require to be defended with no less boldness than was required for their commission. But we must take care not to carry matters with too high a hand, for fear of creating a bad impression by an appearance of over-confidence.¹ The most effective of all such methods was in times past that by which more than anything else Cicero is considered to have saved Lucius Murena² from the attacks of his accusers, who were men of the greatest distinction. For he persuaded the court that nothing was more necessary in view of the critical position of affairs than that Murena should assume the consulship on the thirty-first of December. This form of appeal is now, however, almost entirely obsolete, since the safety of the state is to-day dependent on the watchful care of a single ruler, and cannot conceivably be imperilled by the result of a trial.

I have spoken of accusers and accused because it is in situations involving danger that the emotional appeal is most serviceable. But private cases also admit of both kinds of peroration, namely, that which consists in the recapitulation of the proofs and that, which takes the form of an appeal for pity, the latter being employed when the position or reputation of the litigant seems to be in danger. For to embark on such tragic methods in trivial cases would be like putting the mask and buskins of Hercules on a small child.

² pro Mur. xxxvii. 79.

It is also worth while pointing out that, in my 37 opinion, the manner in which the client whose sorrows we parade before the court conforms his behaviour to the methods of his advocate is of the utmost importance. For sometimes our appeal falls flat owing to the ignorance, rusticity, indifference or uncouthness of our client, and it is consequently most important that the advocate should take all necessary precautions in this connexion. I have 38 often seen clients whose behaviour was wholly out of keeping with the line adopted by their counsel, since their expression showed not the slightest emotion, while they displayed a most unseasonable cheerfulness and even aroused laughter by their looks or actions; such incongruity is especially frequent when the appeal is of a theatrical character. On one occasion an advocate produced a girl alleged 39 to be the sister of the opposing party (for it was on this point that the dispute turned) and led her across to the benches occupied by his opponents as though to leave her in the arms of her brother: I however had given the brother timely warning and he had left his seat. The advocate, although as a rule an eloquent speaker, was struck dumb by the unexpected turn of events and took his little girl back again in the tamest possible manner. There was another 40 advocate who was defending a woman who thought to secure a great effect by producing the portrait of her husband, but sent the court into repeated peals of laughter. For the persons entrusted with the duty of handing in the portrait had no idea of the nature of a peroration and displayed it whenever the advocate looked their way, and when at last it was produced at the proper moment it destroyed all the good effect of his previous eloquence by its hideousness, for it was a wax cast taken from an old man's corpse. We are also familiar with the story 41 of what happened to Glycon, nicknamed Spiridion. He asked a boy whom he produced in court why he was crying; to which the boy replied, that his paedagogus was pinching him. But the most effective warning as to the perils which beset the peroration is the story told by Cicero¹ about the Caepasii. But all these perils may be boldly faced by those 42 who have no difficulty in changing their line of pleading. Those however who cannot get away from what they have written, are reduced to silence by such emergencies or else led into making false statements, as for instance if an advocate should say, "He stretches out suppliant hands to embrace your knees," or "The unhappy man is locked in the embrace of his children," or "See he recalls me to the point," although the person in question is doing none of these things. Such faults are due to the 43 practice of the schools, where we are free to feign what we will with impunity, because we are at liberty to invent facts. But this is impossible when we are confronted with realities, and it was an excellent remark that Cassius made to a young orator who said, "Why do you look so fiercely at me, Severus?" To which he replied, "I was doing nothing of the kind, but if it is in your manuscript, here you are!" And he fixed his eyes on him with the most ferocious scowl that he could muster. There is one point which it is specially important to 44

BOOK VI. 1. 44-47

remember, that we should never attempt to move our audience to tears without drawing on all the resources of our eloquence. For while this form of emotional appeal is the most effective of all, when successful, its failure results in anti-climax, and if the pleader is a feeble speaker he would have been wiser to leave the pathos of the situation to the imagination of the judges. For look and voice and even the expression 45 on the face of the accused to which the attention of the court is drawn will generally awaken laughter where they fail to awaken compassion. Therefore the pleader must measure and make a careful estimate of his powers, and must have a just comprehension of the difficulty of the task which he contemplates. For there is no halfway house in such matters between tears and laughter.

The task of the peroration is not however confined 46 to exciting pity in the judges: it may also be required to dispel the pity which they feel, either by a set speech designed to recall them from their tears to a consideration of the justice of the case, or by a few witticisms such as, "Give the boy some bread to stop him crying," or the remark made by counsel to a corpulent client, whose opponent, a mere child, had been carried round the court by his advocate, "What am I to do? I can't carry you!" Such 47 jests should not however descend to buffoonery. Consequently I cannot give my approval to the orator, although he was one of the most distinguished speakers of his day, who, when his opponent brought in some children to enhance the effect of his peroration, threw some dice among them, with the result that they began to scramble for them. For their childish ignorance of the perils with which they were threatened might in itself have awakened compassion. For the same reason I cannot commend 48 the advocate who, when his opponent the accuser produced a bloodstained sword in court, fled suddenly from the benches as though in an agony of terror, and then, when his turn came to plead, peeped out of the crowd with his head half covered by his robe and asked whether the man with the sword had gone away. For though he caused a laugh, he made himself ridiculous. Still, theatrical effects of the 49 kind we are discussing can be dispelled by the power of eloquence. Cicero provides most admirable examples of the way in which this may be done both in the *pro Rabirio*¹ where he attacks the production in court of the portrait of Saturninus in the most dignified language, and in the pro Vareno where he launches a number of witticisms against a youth whose wound had been unbound at intervals in the course of the trial.

BOOK VI. I. 47-51

There are also milder kinds of peroration in which, 50 if our opponent is of such a character that he deserves to be treated with respect, we strive to ingratiate ourselves with him or give him some friendly warning or urge him to regard us as his friends. This method was admirably employed by Passienus when he pleaded in a suit brought by his wife Domitia against her brother Ahenobarbus for the recovery of a sum of money: he began by making a number of remarks about the relationship of the two parties and then, referring to their wealth, which was in both cases enormous, added, "There is nothing either of you need less than the subject of this dispute."

All these appeals to emotion, although some hold 51

BOOK VI. I. 51-55

that they should be confined to the exordium and the peroration, which are, I admit, the places where they are most often used, may be employed in other portions of the speech as well, but more briefly, since most of them must be reserved for the opening or the close. But it is in the peroration, if anywhere, that we must let loose the whole torrent of our eloquence. For, if we have spoken well in the rest 52 of our speech, we shall now have the judges on our side, and shall be in a position, now that we have emerged from the reefs and shoals, to spread all our canvas, while since the chief task of the peroration consists of amplification, we may legitimately make free use of words and reflexions that are magnificent and ornate. It is at the close of our drama that we must really stir the theatre, when we have reached the place for the phrase with which the old tragedies and comedies used to end, "Friends, give us your applause."

In other portions of the speech we must appeal 53 to the emotions as occasion may arise. For it would clearly be wrong to set forth facts calling for horror and pity without any such appeal, while, if the question arises as to the quality of any fact, such an appeal may justifiably be subjoined to the proofs of the fact in question. When we are pleading a 54 complicated case which is really made up of several cases, it will be necessary to introduce a number of passages resembling perorations, as Cicero does in the Verrines, where he laments over Philodamus, the ships' captains, the crucifixion of the Roman citizen, and a number of other tragic incidents. Some call 55 these μερικοί ἐπίλογοι, by which they mean a peroration distributed among different portions of a speech.

I should regard them rather as species than as parts of the peroration, since the terms epilogue and peroration both clearly indicate that they form the conclusion of a speech.

II. The peroration is the most important part of forensic pleading, and in the main consists of appeals to the emotions, concerning which I have consequently been forced to say something. But I have not yet been able to give the topic specific consideration as a whole, nor should I have been justified in doing so. We have still, therefore, to discuss a task which forms the most powerful means of obtaining what we desire, and is also more difficult than any of those which we have previously considered, namely that of stirring the emotions of the judges, and of moulding and transforming them to the attitude which we desire. The few remarks which I have already² made on this subject were only such as were essential to my theme, while my purpose was rather to show what ought to be done than to set forth the manner in which we can secure our aim. I must now review the whole subject in a more exhaustive fashion.

There is scope for an appeal to the emotions, as I have already said,¹ in every portion of a speech. Moreover these emotions present great variety, and demand more than cursory treatment, since it is in their handling that the power of oratory shews itself at its highest. Even a slight and limited talent may,³ with the assistance of practice or learning, perhaps succeed in giving life to other departments of oratory, and in developing them to a serviceable extent. At any rate there are, and have always been, a considerable number of pleaders capable of discovering arguments adequate to prove their points. I am far from despising such, but I consider that their utility is restricted to providing the judge with such facts as it is necessary for him to know, and, to be quite frank, I regard them merely as suitable persons to instruct pleaders of real eloquence in the facts of a case. But few indeed are those orators who can sweep the judge with them, lead him to adopt that attitude of mind which they desire, and compel him to weep with them or share their anger. And yet it is this emotional power that dominates the court, it is this form of eloquence that is the queen of all. For as a rule arguments arise out of the case itself, and the better cause has always the larger number to support it, so that the party who wins by means of them will have no further satisfaction than that of knowing that his advocate did not fail him. But the peculiar task of the orator arises when the minds of the judges require force to move them, and their thoughts have actually to be led away from the contemplation of the truth. No instruction from the litigant can secure this, nor can such power be acquired merely by the study of a brief. Proofs, it is true, may induce the judges to regard our case as superior to that of our opponent, but the appeal to the emotions will do more, for it will make them wish our case to be the better. And what they wish, they will also believe. For as soon as they begin to be angry, to feel favourably disposed, to hate or pity, they begin to take a personal interest in the case, and just as lovers are incapable of forming a reasoned judgment on the beauty of the object of their affections, because passion forestalls

BOOK VI. II. 6-9

the sense of sight, so the judge, when overcome by his emotions, abandons all attempt to enquire into the truth of the arguments, is swept along by the tide of passion, and yields himself unquestioning to the torrent. Thus the verdict of the court shows how much weight has been carried by the arguments and the evidence; but when the judge has been really moved by the orator he reveals his feelings while he is still sitting and listening to the case. When those tears, which are the aim of most perorations, well forth from his eyes, is he not giving his verdict for all to see? It is to this, therefore, that the orator must devote all his powers,

“There lie the task and toil!”¹

Without this all else is bare and meagre, weak and devoid of charm. For it is in its power over the emotions that the life and soul of oratory is to be found.

Emotions however, as we learn from ancient authorities, fall into two classes; the one is called pathos by the Greeks and is rightly and correctly expressed in Latin by adfectus (emotion): the other is called ethos, a word for which in my opinion Latin has no equivalent: it is however rendered by mores (morals) and consequently the branch of philosophy known as ethics is styled moral philosophy by us. But close consideration of the nature of the subject leads me to think that in this connexion it is not so much morals in general that is meant as certain peculiar aspects; for the term morals includes every attitude of the mind. The more cautious writers have preferred to give the sense of the term rather than to translate it into Latin. They therefore explain pathos

BOOK VI. II. 9-13

as describing the more violent emotions and ethos as designating those which are calm and gentle: in the one case the passions are violent, in the other subdued, the former command and disturb, the latter persuade and induce a feeling of goodwill. Some 10 add that ethos is continuous, while pathos is momentary. While admitting that this is usually the case, I still hold that there are some subjects which demand that the more violent emotion should be continuous. But, although the gentler emotions require less force and impetus, they call for no less art and experience than the more vehement, and are demanded in a greater number of cases, indeed in a certain sense they are required in all. For as every- 11 thing treated by the orator may be regarded from the ethical standpoint, we may apply the word ethos whenever he speaks of what is honourable and expedient or of what ought or ought not to be done. Some regard commendation and excuse as the peculiar spheres of ethos, but while I admit that they do fall within its sphere, I do not regard them as being alone in so doing. Indeed I would add that pathos 12 and ethos are sometimes of the same nature, differing only in degree; love for instance comes under the head of pathos, affection of ethos; sometimes however they differ, a distinction which is important for the peroration, since ethos is generally employed to calm the storm aroused by pathos. I ought however to explain what is meant by ethos in greater detail, since the term is not in itself sufficiently expressive of its meaning. The ethos which I have in my mind 13 and which I desiderate in an orator is commended to our approval by goodness more than aught else and is not merely calm and mild, but in most cases

BOOK VI. II. 13-16

ingratiating and courteous and such as to excite pleasure and affection in our hearers, while the chief merit in its expression lies in making it seem that all that we say derives directly from the nature of the facts and persons concerned and in the revelation of the character of the orator in such a way that all may recognise it. This kind of ethos should be especially displayed in cases where the persons concerned are intimately connected, whenever we tolerate or pardon any act or offer satisfaction or admonition, in all of which cases there should be no trace of anger or hatred. On the other hand the moderation shown by a father to his son, a guardian to his ward or a husband to his wife will differ from that which is shown by an old man to a youthful stranger who has insulted him or by a man of high rank to his inferior, since in the former cases they emphasise their affection for the wrongdoer and there is no desire to do anything that will excite dislike against them save by the manifestation of the fact that they still love them; while in the one case the offended party should be no more than provoked, in the other he should be really deeply moved. Of the same character, though less violent, is the emotion to be shown when we ask pardon for the errors of the young, or apologise for some youthful amour. Sometimes again gentle raillery of another's passion may derive its tone from ethos, though only to a partial extent. More closely dependent on ethos are the skilful exercise of feigned emotion or the employment of irony in making apologies or asking questions, irony being the term which is applied to words which mean something other than they seem to express. From the same source springs also that more powerful method of exciting hatred, when by a feigned submission to our opponents we pass silent censure on their violence. For the very fact of our yielding serves to demonstrate their insupportable arrogance, while orators who have a passion for abuse or are given to affect freedom of speech fail to realise that it is a far more effective course to make your antagonist unpopular than to abuse him. For the former course makes our antagonists disliked, the latter ourselves. The emotion of love and longing 17 for our friends and connexions is perhaps of an intermediate character, being stronger than ethos and weaker than pathos. There is also good reason for giving the name of ethos to those scholastic exercises¹ in which we portray rustics, misers, cowards and superstitious persons according as our theme may require. For if ethos denotes moral character, our speech must necessarily be based on ethos when it is engaged in portraying such character.

Finally ethos in all its forms requires the speaker to 18 be a man of good character and courtesy. For it is most important that he should himself possess or be thought to possess those virtues for the possession of which it is his duty, if possible, to commend his client as well, while the excellence of his own character will make his pleading all the more convincing and will be of the utmost service to the cases which he undertakes. For the orator who gives the impression of being a bad man while he is speaking, is actually speaking badly, since his words seem to be insincere owing to the absence of ethos which would otherwise have revealed itself. Consequently the 19 style of oratory employed in such cases should be calm and mild with no trace of pride, elevation or sublimity, all of which would be out of place. It is enough to speak appropriately, pleasantly and persuasively, and therefore the intermediate¹ style of oratory is most suitable.

BOOK VI. II. 19-22

The pathos of the Greeks, which we correctly 20 translate by emotion, is of a different character, and I cannot better indicate the nature of the difference than by saying that ethos rather resembles comedy and pathos tragedy. For pathos is almost entirely concerned with anger, dislike, fear, hatred and pity. It will be obvious to all what topics are appropriate to such appeals and I have already spoken on the subject in discussing the exordium and the peroration.² I wish however to point out that fear is of 21 two kinds, that which we feel and that which we cause in others. Similarly there are two kinds of invidia (hatred, envy), to which the two adjectives invidus (envious) and invidiosus (invidious, hateful) correspond. The first supplies an epithet for persons, the second for things, and it is in this latter connexion that the orator's task is even more onerous. For though some things are hateful in themselves such as parricide, murder, poisoning, other things have to be made to seem hateful. This latter con- 22 tingency arises when we attempt to shew that what we have suffered is of a more horrible nature than what are usually regarded as great evils. Vergil will provide an example in the lines³:—

“O blest beyond all maidens Priam's child,
Beneath Troy's lofty bulwarks doomed to die
Upon the tomb of him that was thy foe.”

For how wretched was the lot of Andromache, if Polyxena be accounted happy in comparison with her! Again the same problem arises when we endeavour to magnify our wrongs by saying that other far lesser ills are intolerable; e.g. "If you had merely struck him, your conduct would have been indefensible. But you did more, you wounded him." However I will deal with this subject more fully when I come to speak of amplification.¹ Meanwhile I will content myself with the observation that the aim of appeals to the emotion is not merely to shew the bitter and grievous nature of ills that actually are so, but also to make ills which are usually regarded as tolerable seem unendurable, as for instance when we represent insulting words as inflicting more grievous injury than an actual blow or represent disgrace as being worse than death. For the force of eloquence is such that it not merely compels the judge to the conclusion toward which the nature of the facts lead him, but awakens emotions which either do not naturally arise from the case or are stronger than the case would suggest. This is known as deinosis,² that is to say, language giving additional force to things unjust, cruel or hateful, an accomplishment in which Demosthenes created immense and special effect.

BOOK VI. II. 22-26

If I thought it sufficient to follow traditional rules, I should regard it as adequate treatment for this topic to omit nothing that I have read or been taught, provided that it be reasonably sound. But my design is to bring to light the secret principles of this art, and to open up the inmost recesses of the subject, giving the result not of teaching received from others, but of my own experience and the guidance of nature herself. The prime essential for stirring the emotions of others is, in my opinion, first to feel those emotions oneself. It is sometimes positively ridiculous to counterfeit grief, anger and indignation, if we content ourselves with accommodating our words and looks and make no attempt to adapt our own feelings to the emotions to be expressed. What other reason is there for the eloquence with which mourners express their grief, or for the fluency which anger lends even to the uneducated, save the fact that their minds are stirred to power by the depth and sincerity of their feelings? Consequently, if we wish to give our 27 words the appearance of sincerity, we must assimilate ourselves to the emotions of those who are genuinely so affected, and our eloquence must spring from the same feeling that we desire to produce in the mind of the judge. Will he grieve who can find no trace of grief in the words with which I seek to move him to grief? Will he be angry, if the orator who seeks to kindle his anger shows no sign of labouring under the emotion which he demands from his audience? Will he shed tears if the pleader's eyes are dry? It is utterly impossible. Fire alone can 28 kindle, and moisture alone can wet, nor can one thing impart any colour to another save that which it possesses itself. Accordingly, the first essential is that those feelings should prevail with us that we wish to prevail with the judge, and that we should be moved ourselves before we attempt to move others. But how are we to generate these 29 emotions in ourselves, since emotion is not in our own power? I will try to explain as best I may. There are certain experiences which the Greeks call φαντάσματα, and the Romans visions, whereby things absent are presented to our imagination with such extreme vividness that they seem actually to be before our very eyes. It is the man who is really sensitive to such impressions who will have the greatest power over the emotions. Some writers describe the possessor of this power of vivid imagination, whereby things, words and actions are presented in the most realistic manner, by the Greek word εὐφαντασίωτος; and it is a power which all may readily acquire if they will. When the mind is unoccupied or is absorbed by fantastic hopes or day-dreams, we are haunted by these visions of which I am speaking to such an extent that we imagine that we are travelling abroad, crossing the sea, fighting, addressing the people, or enjoying the use of wealth that we do not actually possess, and seem to ourselves not to be dreaming but acting. Surely, then, it may be possible to turn this form of hallucination to some profit. I am complaining that a man has been murdered. Shall I not bring before my eyes all the circumstances which it is reasonable to imagine must have occurred in such a connexion? Shall I not see the assassin burst suddenly from his hiding-place, the victim tremble, cry for help, beg for mercy, or turn to run? Shall I not see the fatal blow delivered and the stricken body fall? Will not the blood, the deathly pallor, the groan of agony, the death-rattle, be indelibly impressed upon my mind?

From such impressions arises that ἐνάργεια which Cicero¹ calls illumination and actuality, which makes us seem not so much to narrate as to exhibit the actual scene, while our emotions will be no less actively stirred than if we were present at the actual occurrence. Is it not from visions such as these that Vergil was inspired to write—

BOOK VI. II. 32-36

“Sudden her fingers let the shuttle fall
And all the thread was spilled,”¹

Or,

“In his smooth breast the gaping wound,”² 33

or the description of the horse at the funeral of Pallas, “his trappings laid aside”?³ And how vivid was the image of death conceived by the poet when he wrote—

“And dying sees his own dear Argive home”?⁴

Again, when we desire to awaken pity, we must 34 actually believe that the ills of which we complain have befallen our own selves, and must persuade our minds that this is really the case. We must identify ourselves with the persons of whom we complain that they have suffered grievous, unmerited and bitter misfortune, and must plead their case and for a brief space feel their suffering as though it were our own, while our words must be such as we should use if we stood in their shoes. I have often 35 seen actors, both in tragedy and comedy, leave the theatre still drowned in tears after concluding the performance of some moving role. But if the mere delivery of words written by another has the power to set our souls on fire with fictitious emotions, what will the orator do whose duty it is to picture to himself the facts and who has it in his power to feel the same emotion as his client whose interests are at stake? Even in the schools it is desirable that 36 the student should be moved by his theme, and should imagine it to be true; indeed, it is all the more desirable then, since, as a rule in scholastic declamations, the speaker more often appears as the actual litigant than as his advocate. Suppose we are impersonating an orphan, a shipwrecked man, or one in grave peril. What profit is there in assuming such a role unless we also assume the emotions which it involves? I have thought it necessary not to conceal these considerations from my reader, since they have contributed to the acquisition of such reputation for talent as I possess or once possessed. I have frequently been so much moved while speaking, that I have not merely been wrought upon to tears, but have turned pale and shown all the symptoms of genuine grief.

III. I now turn to a very different talent, namely that which dispels the graver emotions of the judge by exciting his laughter, frequently diverts his attention from the facts of the case, and sometimes even refreshes him and revives him when he has begun to be bored or wearied by the case. How hard it is to attain success in this connexion is shown by the cases of the two great masters of Greek and Roman oratory. For many think that Demosthenes ² was deficient in this faculty, and that Cicero used it without discrimination. Indeed, it is impossible to suppose that Demosthenes deliberately avoided all display of humour, since his few jests are so unworthy of his other excellences that they clearly show that he lacked the power, not merely that he disliked to use it. Cicero, on the other hand, was ³ regarded as being unduly addicted to jests, not merely outside the courts, but in his actual speeches as well. Personally (though whether I am right in this view, or have been led astray by an exaggerated admiration for the prince of orators, I cannot say),

BOOK VI. III. 3-7

I regard him as being the possessor of a remarkable turn of wit. For his daily speech was full of humour, 4 while in his disputes in court and in his examination of witnesses he produced more good jests than any other, while the somewhat insipid jokes which he launches against Verres are always attributed by him to others and produced as evidence: wherefore, the more vulgar they are, the more probable is it that they are not the invention of the orator, but were current as public property. I wish, however, that 5 Tiro, or whoever it may have been that published the three books of Cicero's jests, had restricted their number and had shown more judgment in selecting than zeal in collecting them. For he would then have been less exposed to the censure of his calumniators, although the latter will, in any case, as in regard to all the manifestations of his genius, find it easier to detect superfluities than deficiencies. The chief difficulty which confronts the orator in 6 this connexion lies in the fact that sayings designed to raise a laugh are generally untrue (and falsehood always involves a certain meanness), and are often deliberately distorted, and, further, never complimentary: while the judgments formed by the audience on such jests will necessarily vary, since the effect of a jest depends not on the reason, but on an emotion which it is difficult, if not impossible, to describe. For 7 I do not think that anybody can give an adequate explanation, though many have attempted to do so, of the cause of laughter, which is excited not merely by words or deeds, but sometimes even by touch. Moreover, there is great variety in the things which raise a laugh, since we laugh not merely at those words or actions which are smart or witty, but also at those which reveal folly, anger or fear. Consequently, the cause of laughter is uncertain, since laughter is never far removed from derision. For, as Cicero¹ says, "Laughter has its basis in some kind or other of deformity or ugliness," and whereas, when we point to such a blemish in others, the result is known as wit, it is called folly when the same jest is turned against ourselves.

Now, though laughter may be regarded as a trivial matter, and an emotion frequently awakened by buffoons, actors or fools, it has a certain imperious force of its own which it is very hard to resist. It often breaks out against our will and extorts confession of its power, not merely from our face and voice, but convulses the whole body as well. Again, it frequently turns the scale in matters of great importance, as I have already observed :² for instance, it often dispels hatred or anger. A proof of this is given by the story of the young men of Tarentum, who had made a number of scurrilous criticisms of Pyrrhus over the dinner table: they were called upon to answer for their statements, and, since the charge was one that admitted neither of denial nor of excuse, they succeeded in escaping, thanks to a happy jest which made the king laugh; for one of the accused said, "Yes, and if the bottle hadn't been empty, we should have killed you!" a jest which succeeded in dissipating the animosity which the charge had aroused.

Still, whatever the essence of humour may be, and although I would not venture to assert that it is altogether independent of art (for it involves a certain power of observation, and rules for its employment have been laid down by writers both of Greece and Rome), I will insist on this much, that it depends mainly on nature and opportunity. The influence of nature consists not merely in the fact that one man is quicker or cleverer than another in the invention of jests (for such a power can be increased by teaching), but also in the possession of some peculiar charm of look or manner, the effect of which is such that the same remarks would be less entertaining if uttered by another. Opportunity, on the other hand, is dependent on circumstances, and is of such importance that with its assistance not merely the unlearned, but even mere country bumpkins are capable of producing effective witticisms: while much again may depend on some previous remark made by another which will provide opportunity for repartee. For wit always appears to greater advantage in reply than in attack. We are also confronted by the additional difficulty that there are no specific exercises for the development of humour nor professors to teach it. Consequently, while convivial gatherings and conversation give rise to frequent displays of wit, since daily practice develops the faculty, oratorical wit is rare, for it has no fixed rules to guide it, but must adapt itself to the ways of the world. There has, however, never been anything to prevent the composition of themes such as will afford scope for humour, so that our controversial declamations may have an admixture of jests, while special topics may be set which will give the young student practice in the play of wit. Nay, even those pleasantries in which we indulge on certain occasions of festive licence (and to which we give the name of mots,¹ as, indeed, they are), if only a little more good sense were employed in their invention, and they were seasoned by a slight admixture of seriousness, might afford a most useful training. As it is, they serve merely to divert the young and merrymakers.

BOOK VI. III. 16-19

There are various names by which we describe 17
~~wit~~, but we have only to consider them separately to perceive their specific meaning. First, there is urbanitas, which I observe denotes language with a smack of the city in its words, accent and idiom, and further suggests a certain tincture of learning derived from associating with well-educated men; in a word, it represents the opposite of rusticity. The meaning of venustus is obvious; it means that 18 which is said with grace and charm. Salsus is, as a rule, applied only to what is laughable: but this is not its natural application, although whatever is laughable should have the salt of wit in it. For Cicero,¹ when he says that whatever has the salt of wit is Attic, does not say this because persons of the Attic school are specially given to laughter; and again when Catullus says—

In all her body not a grain of salt!²

he does not mean that there is nothing in her body to give cause for laughter. When, therefore, we speak 19 of the salt of wit, we refer to wit about which there is nothing insipid, wit, that is to say, which serves as a simple seasoning of language, a condiment which is silently appreciated by our judgment, as food is appreciated by the palate, with the result that it stimulates our taste and saves a speech from becoming tedious. But just as salt, if sprinkled freely over food, gives a special relish of its own, so long as it is not used to excess, so in the case of those who have the salt of wit there is something about their language which arouses in us a thirst to hear. Again, I do not regard the epithet facetus as applicable solely to that which raises a laugh. If that were so Horace¹ would never have said that nature had granted Vergil the gift of being facetus in song. I think that the term is rather applied to a certain grace and polished elegance. This is the meaning which it bears in Cicero's letters, where he quotes the words of Brutus,² "In truth her feet are graceful and soft as she goes delicately on her way." This meaning suits the passage in Horace,¹ to which I have already made reference, "To Vergil gave a soft and graceful wit." Iocus is usually taken to mean the opposite of seriousness. This view is, however, somewhat too narrow. For to feign, to terrify, or to promise, are all at times forms of jesting. Dicacitas is no doubt derived from dico, and is therefore common to all forms of wit, but is specially applied to the language of banter, which is a humorous form of attack. Therefore, while the critics allow that Demosthenes was urbanus, they deny that he was dicax.

The essence, however, of the subject which we are now discussing is the excitement of laughter, and consequently the whole of this topic is entitled περὶ γελοίου by the Greeks. It has the same primary division as other departments of oratory, that is to say, it is concerned with things and words. The application of humour to oratory may be divided into three heads: for there are three things out of which we may seek to raise a laugh, to wit, others, ourselves, or things intermediate. In the first case we either reprove or refute or make light of or retort or deride the arguments of others. In the second we speak of things which concern ourselves in a humorous manner and, to quote the words of Cicero,¹ say things which have a suggestion of absurdity. For there are certain sayings which are regarded as folly if they slip from us unawares, but as witty if uttered ironically. The 24 third kind consists, as Cicero also tells us, in cheating expectations, in taking words in a different sense from what was intended, and in other things which affect neither party to the suit, and which I have, therefore, styled intermediate. Further, things de- 25 signed to raise a laugh may either be said or done. In the latter case laughter is sometimes caused by an act possessing a certain element of seriousness as well, as in the case of Marcus Caelius the praetor, who, when the consul Isauricus broke his curule chair, had another put in its place, the seat of which was made of leather thongs, by way of allusion to the story that the consul had once been scourged by his father: sometimes, again, it is aroused by an act which passes the grounds of decency, as in the case of Caelius' box,² a jest which was not fit for an orator or any respectable man to make. On 26 the other hand the joke may lie in some remark about a ridiculous look or gesture; such jests are very attractive, more especially when delivered with every appearance of seriousness; for there are no jests so insipid as those which parade the fact that they are intended to be witty. Still, although the gravity with which a jest is uttered increases its attraction, and the mere fact that the speaker does not laugh himself makes his words laughable, there is also such a thing as a humorous look, manner or gesture, provided always that they observe the happy mean. Further, a jest will either be free and lively, 27 like the majority of those uttered by Aulus Galba, or abusive, like those with which Junius Bassus recently made us familiar, or bitter, like those of Cassius Severus, or gentle, like those of Domitius Afer. Much depends on the occasion on which a 28 jest is uttered. For in social gatherings and the intercourse of every day a certain freedom is not unseemly in persons of humble rank, while liveliness is becoming to all. Our jests should never be designed to wound, and we should never make it our ideal to lose a friend sooner than lose a jest. Where the battles of the courts are concerned I am always better pleased when it is possible to indulge in gentle raillery, although it is, of course, permissible to be abusive or bitter in the words we use against our opponents, just as it is permissible to accuse them openly of crime, and to demand the last penalty of the law. But in the courts as elsewhere it is regarded as inhuman to hit a man when he is down, either because he is the innocent victim of misfortune or because such attacks may recoil on those who make them. Consequently, the first points to be taken into consideration are who the speaker is, what is the nature of the case, who is the judge, who is the victim, and what is the character of the remarks that are made. It is most unbecoming 29 for an orator to distort his features or use uncouth gestures, tricks that arouse such merriment in farce. No less unbecoming are ribald jests, and such as are employed upon the stage. As for obscenity, it should not merely be banished from his language, but should not even be suggested. For even if our opponent has rendered himself liable to such a charge, our denunciation should not take the form of a jest. Further, although I want my orator to 30 speak with wit, he must not give the impression of striving after it. Consequently he must not display his wit on every possible occasion, but must sacrifice a jest sooner than sacrifice his dignity. Again, no 31 one will endure an accuser who employs jests to season a really horrible case, nor an advocate for the defence who makes merry over one that calls for pity. Moreover, there is a type of judge whose temperament is too serious to allow him to tolerate laughter. It may also happen that a jest directed against an 32 opponent may apply to the judge or to our own client, although there are some orators who do not refrain even from jests that may recoil upon themselves. This was the case with Sulpicius Longus, who, despite the fact that he was himself surpassingly hideous, asserted of a man against whom he was appearing in a case involving his status as a free man, that even his face was the face of a slave. To this Domitius Afer replied, "Is it your profound conviction, Longus, that an ugly man must be a 33 slave?" Insolence and arrogance are likewise to 34 be avoided, nor must our jests seem unsuitable to the time or place, or give the appearance of studied premeditation, or smell of the lamp, while those directed against the unfortunate are, as I have already said, inhuman. Again, some advocates are men of such established authority and such known respectability, that any insolence shown them would only hurt the assailant. As regards the way in which we should deal with friends I have already given instructions. It is the duty not merely of an orator, but of any reasonable human being, when attacking one whom it is dangerous to offend to take care that his remarks do not end in exciting serious enmity, or the necessity for a grovelling apology. Sarcasm that applies to a number of persons is injudicious: I refer to cases where it is directed against whole nations or classes of society, or against rank and pursuits which are common to many. A good man will see that everything he says is consistent with his dignity and the respectability of his character; for we pay too dear for the laugh we raise if it is at the cost of our own integrity. 35

BOOK VI. III. 29-34

It is, however, a difficult task to indicate the sources from which laughter may be legitimately derived or the topics where it may be naturally employed. To attempt to deal exhaustively with the subject would be an interminable task and a waste of labour. For the topics suitable to jests are no less numerous than those from which we may derive reflexions, as they are called, and are, moreover, identical with the latter. The powers of invention and expression come into play no less where jests are concerned, while as regards expression its force will depend in part on the choice of words, in part on the figures employed. Laughter then will be derived either from the physical appearance of our opponent or from his character as revealed in his words and actions, or from external sources; for all forms of raillery come under one or other of these heads; if the raillery is serious, we style it as severe; if, on the other hand, it is of a lighter character, we regard it as humorous. These themes for jest may be pointed out to the eye or described in words or indicated by some mot. It is only on 36 37 38

rare occasions that it is possible to make them visible to the eye, as Gaius Julius¹ did when Helvius Mancina kept clamouring against him. "I will show you what you're like!" he cried, and then, as Mancina persisted in asking him to do so, pointed with his finger at the picture of a Gaul painted on a Cimbric shield, a figure to which Mancina bore a striking resemblance. There were shops round the forum and the shield had been hung up over one of them by way of a sign. The narration of a 39 humorous story may often be used with clever effect and is a device eminently becoming to an orator. Good examples are the story told of Caepasius and Fabricius, which Cicero tells in the pro Cluentio, or the story told by Caelius of the dispute between Decimus Laelius and his colleague when they were both in a hurry to reach their province first. But in all such cases the whole narrative must possess elegance and charm, while the orator's own contribution to the story should be the most humorous element. Take for instance the way in which Cicero gives a special relish to the flight of Fabricius.² "And so, just at the moment when he thought his 40 speech was showing him at his best and he had uttered the following solemn words, words designed to prove a master-stroke of art, 'Look at the fortunes of mankind, gentlemen, look at the aged form of Gaius Fabricius,' just at that very moment, I say, when he had repeated the word 'look' several times by way of making his words all the more impressive, he looked himself, and found that Fabricius had slunk out of court with his head hanging down." I will not quote the rest of the passage, for it is well known. But he develops the theme still further although the plain facts amount simply to this, that Fabricius had left the court. The whole of the story told by Caelius is full of wit and invention, but the gem of the passage is its conclusion. "He followed him, but how he crossed the straits, whether it was in a ship or a fisherman's boat, no one knew; but the Sicilians, being of a lively turn of wit, said that he rode on a dolphin and effected his crossing like a second Arion."¹ Cicero² thinks that humour belongs to narrative and wit to sallies against the speaker's antagonist. Domitius Afer showed remarkable finish in this department; for, while narratives of the kind I have described are frequent in his speeches, several books have been published of his witticisms as well. This latter form of wit lies not merely in sallies and brief displays of wit, but may be developed at greater length, witness the story told by Cicero in the second book of his de Oratore,³ in which Lucius Crassus dealt with Brutus, against whom he was appearing in court. Brutus was prosecuting Cnaeus Plancus and had produced two readers⁴ to show that Lucius Crassus, who was counsel for the defence, in the speech which he delivered on the subject of the colony of Narbo had advocated measures contrary to those which he recommended in speaking of the Servilian law. Crassus, in reply, called for three readers and gave them the dialogues of Brutus' father to read out. One of these dialogues was represented as taking place on his estate at Privernum, the second on his estate at Alba, and the third on his estate at Tibur. Crassus then asked where these estates were. Now Brutus had sold them all, and in those days it was considered somewhat discreditable to sell one's paternal acres. Similar attractive effects of narrative may be produced by the narration of fables or at times even of historical anecdotes.

On the other hand brevity in wit gives greater 45 point and speed. It may be employed in two ways, according as we are the aggressors, or are replying to our opponents; the method, however, in both cases is to some extent the same. For there is nothing that can be said in attack that cannot be used in riposte. But there are certain points 46 which are peculiar to reply. For remarks designed for attack are usually brought ready-made into court, after long thought at home, whereas those made in reply are usually improvised during a dispute or the cross-examination of witnesses. But though there are many topics on which we may draw for our jests, I must repeat that not all these topics are becoming to orators: above all doubles 47 entendres and obscenity, such as is dear to the Atellan farce, are to be avoided, as also are those coarse jibes so common on the lips of the rabble, where the ambiguity of words is turned to the service of abuse. I cannot even approve of a similar form of jest, that sometimes slipped out even from Cicero, though not when he was pleading in the courts: for example, once when a candidate, alleged to be the son of a cook, solicited someone else's vote in his presence, he said, Ego quoque tibi favebo.¹ I say 48 this not because I object absolutely to all play on words capable of two different meanings, but because such jests are rarely effective, unless they are helped out by actual facts as well as similarity of sound.

sentence might mean either I will support you, cook, or I too will support you.

For example, I regard the jest which Cicero levelled against that same Isauricus, whom I mentioned above, as being little less than sheer buffoonery. "I wonder," he said, "why your father, the steadiest of men, left behind him such a stripy gentleman as yourself."¹ On the other hand, the following 49 instance of the same type of wit is quite admirable: when Milo's accuser, by way of proving that he had lain in wait for Clodius, alleged that he had put up at Bovillae before the ninth hour in order to wait until Clodius left his villa, and kept repeating the question, "When was Clodius killed?", Cicero replied, "Late!"² a retort which in itself justifies us in refusing to exclude this type of wit altogether. Sometimes, too, the same word may be used not 50 merely in several senses, but in absolutely opposite senses. For example, Nero³ said of a dishonest slave, "No one was more trusted in my house: there was nothing closed or sealed to him." Such ambi- 51 guity may even go so far as to present all the appearance of a riddle, witness the jest that Cicero made at the expense of Pletorius, the accuser of Fonteius: "His mother," he said, "kept a school while she lived and masters after she was dead."⁴ The explanation is that in her lifetime women of infamous character used to frequent her house, while after her death her property was sold. (I may note however that ludus, is used metaphorically in the sense of school, while magistri is used ambiguously.) A similar form of 52

⁴ magister may mean a schoolmaster or a receiver (magister bonorum) placed in charge of the goods to be sold. The phrase here has the same suggestion as "having the bailiffs in the house." This passage does not occur in the portions of the pro Fonteio which survive.

jest may be made by use of the figure known as metalepsis,¹ as when Fabius Maximus complained of the meagreness of the gifts made by Augustus to his friends, and said that his congiaria were heminnaria: for *congiarium*² implies at once liberality and a particular measure, and Fabius put a slight on the liberality of Augustus by a reference to the measure. This form of jest is as poor as is the invention of 53 punning names by the addition, subtraction or change of letters: I find, for instance, a case where a certain Acisculus was called Pacisculus because of some "compact" which he had made, while one Placidus was nicknamed Acidus because of his "sour" temper, and one Tullius was dubbed Tollius³ because he was a thief. Such puns are more successful with things 54 than names. It was, for example, a neat hit of Afer's when he said that Manlius Sura, who kept rushing to and fro while he was pleading, waving his hands, letting his toga fall and replacing it, was not merely pleading, but giving himself a lot of needless trouble.⁴ For there is a spice of wit about the word satagere in itself, even if there were no resemblance to any other word. Similar jests may 55 be produced by the addition or removal of the aspirate, or by splitting up a word or joining it to another: the effect is generally poor, but the practice is occasionally permissible. Jest drawn from names are of the same type. Cicero introduces a number of such jests against Verres, but always as quotations from others. On one occasion he says that he would sweep¹ everything away, for his name was Verres; on another, that he had given more trouble to Hercules, whose temple he had pillaged, than was given by the Erymanthine "boar"; on another, that he was a bad "priest" who had left so worthless a pig behind him.² For Verres' predecessor was named Sacerdos. Sometimes, however, a lucky 56 chance may give us an opportunity of employing such jests with effect, as for instance when Cicero in the *pro Caecina*³ says of the witness Sextus Clodius Phormio, "He was not less black or less bold than the Phormio of Terence."

⁴ This pun cannot be reproduced. Watson attempts to express it by "doing business in pleading" and "overdoing it." But "overdoing it" has none of the neatness of satagere, which is said to have "a spice of wit about it," since it means lit. "to do enough," an ironic way of saying "to overdo it."

We may note therefore that jests which turn on 57 the meaning of things are at once more pointed and more elegant. In such cases resemblances between things produce the best effects, more especially if we refer to something of an inferior or more trivial nature, as in the jests of which our forefathers were so fond, when they called Lentulus Spinther and Scipio Serapio.⁴ But such jests may be drawn not merely from the names of men, but from animals as well; for example when I was a boy, Junius Bassus, one of the wittiest of men, was nicknamed the white ass. And Sarmentus⁵ compared Messius Cicirrus 58 to a wild horse. The comparison may also be drawn from inanimate objects: for example Publius Blessius called a certain Julius, who was dark, lean and bent, the iron buckle. This method of raising a laugh is much in vogue to-day. Such resemblances 59

⁴ From their resemblances to Spinther, a bad actor, and to Serapio, a dealer in sacrificial victims.

⁵ Sarmentus, a favourite of Augustus, cp. Hor. Sat. i. v. 56, where the story is given.

may be put to the service of wit either openly or allusively. Of the latter type is the remark of Augustus, made to a soldier who showed signs of timidity in presenting a petition, "Don't hold it out as if you were giving a penny to an elephant." Some 60 of these jests turn on similarity of meaning. Of this kind was the witticism uttered by Vatinius when he was prosecuted by Calvus. Vatinius was wiping his forehead with a white handkerchief, and his accuser called attention to the unseemliness of the act. Whereupon Vatinius replied, "Though I am on my trial, I go on eating white bread all the same."¹ Still more ingenious is the application of 61 one thing to another on the ground of some resemblance, that is to say the adaptation to one thing of a circumstance which usually applies to something else, a type of jest which we may regard as being an ingenious form of fiction. For example, when ivory models of captured towns were carried in Caesar's triumphal procession, and a few days later wooden models of the same kind were carried at the triumph of Fabius Maximus,² Chrysippus³ remarked that the latter were the cases for Caesar's ivory towns. And Pedo⁴ said of a heavy-armed gladiator who was pursuing another armed with a net and failed to strike him, "He wants to catch him alive." Resem- 62 blance and ambiguity may be used in conjunction: Galba for example said to a man who stood very much at his ease when playing ball, "You stand as if you were one of Caesar's candidates."⁵ The ambiguity lies in the word stand, while the indifference shewn by the player supplies the resemblance. I need say no more on this form of humour. But the practice of combining different types of jest is very common, and those are best which are of this composite character. A like use may be made of dissimilarity. Thus a Roman knight was once drinking at the games, and Augustus sent him the following message, "If I want to dine, I go home." To which the other replied, "Yes, but you are not afraid of losing your seat." Contraries give rise to more than one kind of jest. For instance the following jests made by Augustus and Galba differ in form. Augustus was engaged in dismissing an officer with dishonour from his service: the officer kept interrupting him with entreaties and said, "What shall I say to my father?" Augustus replied, "Tell him that I fell under your displeasure." Galba, when a friend asked him for the loan of a cloak, said, "I cannot lend it you, as I am going to stay at home," the point being that the rain was pouring through the roof of his garret at the time. I will add a third example, although out of respect to its author I withhold his name: "You are more lustful than a eunuch," where we are surprised by the appearance of a word which is the very opposite of what we should have expected. Under the same heading, although it is quite different from any of the preceding, we must place the remark made by Marcus Vestinus when it was reported to him that a certain man was dead. "Some day then he will cease to stink," was his reply. But I shall overload this book with illustrations and turn it into a common jest-book, if I continue to quote each jest that was made by our forefathers.

⁵ A candidate recommended by the emperor was automatically elected. I have borrowed Watson's translation of the pun. Petere is the regular word for "standing for office." Petere pilam probably means "to attempt to catch the ball."

BOOK VI. III. 65-68

All forms of argument afford equal opportunity for jests. Augustus for example employed definition when he said of two ballet-dancers who were engaged in a contest, turn and turn about, as to who could make the most exquisite gestures, that one was a dancer and the other merely interrupted the dancing. Galba on the other hand made use of partition when he replied to a friend who asked him for a cloak, "It is not raining and you don't need it; if it does rain, I shall wear it myself." Similar material for jests is supplied by genus, species, property, difference, conjugates,¹ adjuncts, antecedents, consequents, contraries, causes, effects, and comparisons of things greater, equal, or less,² as it is also by all forms of trope. Are not a large number of jests made by means of hyperbole? Take for instance Cicero's³ remark about a man who was remarkable for his height, "He bumped his head against the Fabian arch," or the remark made by Publius Oppius about the family of the Lentuli to the effect, that since the children were always smaller than their parents, the race would "perish by propagation." Again, what of irony? Is not even the most severe form of irony a kind of jest? Afer made a witty use of it when he replied to Didius Gallus, who, after making the utmost efforts to secure a provincial government, complained on receiving the appointment that he had been forced into accepting, "Well, then, do something for your country's sake."⁴ Cicero also employed metaphor to serve his jest, when on receiving a report of uncertain authorship to the effect that Vatinius was dead, he remarked, "Well, for the meantime I shall ⁴ i.e. sacrifice your own interests and serve your country for its own sake.

make use of the interest."¹ He also employed 69 allegory in the witticism that he was fond of making about Marcus Caelius, who was better at bringing charges than at defending his client against them, to the effect that he had a good right hand, but a weak left.² As an example of the use of emphasis I may quote the jest of Aulus Villius, that Tuccius was killed by his sword falling upon him.³ Figures of 70 thought, which the Greeks call σχήματα διανοίας, may be similarly employed, and some writers have classified jests under their various headings. For we ask questions, express doubts, make assertions, threaten, wish and speak in pity or in anger. And everything is laughable that is obviously a pretence. It is easy 71 to make fun of folly, for folly is laughable in itself;
 but we may improve such jests by adding something of our own. Titius Maximus put a foolish question to Campatius, who was leaving the theatre, when he asked him if he had been watching the play. "No," replied Campatius, "I was playing ball in the stalls," whereby he made the question seem even more foolish than it actually was.

Refutation consists in denying, rebutting, defend- 72
 ing or making light of a charge, and each of these affords scope for humour. Manius Curius, for example, showed humour in the way in which he denied a charge that had been brought against him. His accuser had produced a canvas, in every scene of which he was depicted either as naked and in prison or as being restored to freedom by his friends paying off his gambling debts. His only comment was,
 "Did I never win, then?" Sometimes we rebut a 73 to fall upon his sword, and that therefore the sword must have fallen on him.

charge openly, as Cicero did when he refuted the extravagant lies of Vibius Curius about his age: "Well, then," he remarked, "in the days when you and I used to practise declamation together, you were not even born." At other times we may rebut it by pretending to agree. Cicero, for example, when Fabia the wife of Dolabella asserted that her age was thirty, remarked, "That is true, for I have heard it for the last twenty years." Sometimes too it is 74 effective to add something more biting in place of the charge which is denied, as was done by Junius Bassus when Domitia the wife of Passienus¹ complained that by way of accusing her of meanness he had alleged that she even sold old shoes. "No," he replied, "I never said anything of the sort. I said you bought them." A witty travesty of defence was once produced by a Roman knight who was charged by Augustus with having squandered his patrimony. "I thought it was my own," he answered. As regards making light of a charge, there 75 are two ways in which this may be done. We may throw cold water on the excessive boasts of our opponent, as was done by Gaius Caesar,² when Pomponius displayed a wound in his face which he had received in the rebellion of Sulpicius and which he boasted he had received while fighting for Caesar: "You should never look round," he retorted, "when you are running away." Or we may do the same with some charge that is brought against us, as was done by Cicero when he remarked to those who reproached him for marrying Publilia, a young un- 76 wedded girl, when he was already over sixty, "Well, she will be a woman to-morrow." Some style this type of jest consequent and, on the ground that both jests seem to follow so naturally and inevitably, class it with the jest which Cicero levelled against Curio, who always began his speeches by asking indulgence for his youth: "You will find your exordium easier every day," he said. Another method of making 77 light of a statement is to suggest a reason. Cicero employed this method against Vatinius. The latter was lame and, wishing to make it seem that his health was improved, said that he could now walk as much as two miles. "Yes," said Cicero, "for the days are longer." Again Augustus, when the inhabitants of Tarraco reported that a palm had sprung up on the altar dedicated to him, replied, "That shows how often you kindle fire upon it." Cassius Severus 78 showed his wit by transferring a charge made against himself to a different quarter. For when he was reproached by the praetor on the ground that his advocates had insulted Lucius Varus, an Epicurean and a friend of Caesar, he replied, "I do not know who they were who insulted him, I suppose they were Stoics."

Of retorts there are a number of forms, the wittiest being that which is helped out by a certain verbal similarity, as in the retort made by Trachalus to Suelius. The latter had said, "If that is the case, you go into exile": to which Trachalus replied, "And if it is not the case, you go back into exile."¹ Cassius Severus baffled an opponent who reproached 79 him with the fact that Proculeius had forbidden him to enter his house by replying, "Do I ever go there?" But one jest may also be defeated by another: for example, Augustus of blessed memory, when the Gauls gave him a golden necklet weighing a hundred pounds, and Dolabella, speaking in jest but with an eye to the success of his jest, said, "General, give me your necklet," replied, "I had rather give you the crown of oak leaves."¹ So, too, one lie may be defeated by another: Galba, for instance, when someone told him that he once bought a lamprey five feet long for half a denarius in Sicily, replied, "There is nothing extraordinary in that: for they grow to such a length in those seas that the fishermen tie them round their waists in lieu of ropes!" Then there is the opposite of denial, namely a feigned confession, which likewise may show no small wit. Thus Afer, when pleading against a freedman of Claudius Caesar and when another freedman called out from the opposite side of the court, "You are always speaking against Caesar's freedmen," replied, "Yes, but I make precious little headway." A similar trick is not to deny a charge, though it is obviously false and affords good opportunity for an excellent reply. For example, when Philippus said to Catulus, "Why do you bark so?" the latter replied, "I see a thief." To make jokes against oneself is scarcely fit for any save professed buffoons and is strongly to be disapproved in an orator. This form of jest has precisely the same varieties as those which we make against others and therefore I pass it by, although it is not infrequently employed. On the other hand scurrilous or brutal jests, although they may raise a laugh, are quite unworthy of a gentleman. I remember a jest of this kind being made by weight of the two decorations. Further, Augustus was very parsimonious in bestowing military decorations and had himself received the crown of oak leaves from the senate as the saviour of Rome, a fact which must have rendered its bestowal on others rare, if not non-existent.

¹ cp. Cic. de Or. II. liv. 220.

a certain man against an inferior who had spoken with some freedom against him: "I will smack your head, and bring an action against you for having such a hard skull!" In such cases it is difficult to say whether the audience should laugh or be angry.

There remains the prettiest of all forms of humour, 84 namely the jest which depends for success on deceiving anticipations¹ or taking another's words in a sense other than he intended. The unexpected element may be employed by the attacking party, as in the example cited by Cicero,² "What does this man lack save wealth and—virtue?" or in the remark of Afer, "For pleading causes he is most admirably—dressed." Or it may be employed to meet a statement made by another, as it was by Cicero³ on hearing a false report of Vatinius' death: he had met one of the latter's freedmen and asked him, "Is all well?" The freedman answered, "All is well." To which Cicero replied, "Is he dead, then?" But the loudest laughter of all is produced by simulation and dissimulation, proceedings which differ but 85 little and are almost identical; but whereas simulation implies the pretence of having a certain opinion of one's own, dissimulation consists in feigning that one does not understand someone else's meaning. Afer employed simulation, when his opponents in a certain case kept saying that Celsina (who was an influential lady) knew all about the facts, and he, pretending to believe that she was a man, said, "Who is he?" Cicero on the other hand employed dissimu- 86 lation when Sextus Annalis gave evidence damaging to the client whom he was defending, and the accuser kept pressing him with the question, "Tell me, Marcus Tullius, what have you to say about Sextus Annalis?"

To which he replied by beginning to recite the Sixth book of the Annals of Ennius, which commences with the line,

“Who may the causes vast of war unfold?”¹

This kind of jest finds its most frequent opportunity 87 in ambiguity, as for example, when Cascellius,² on being consulted by a client who said, “I wish to divide my ship,” replied, “You will lose it then.” But there are also other ways of distorting the meaning; we may for instance give a serious statement a comparatively trivial sense, like the man who, when asked what he thought of a man who had been caught in the act of adultery, replied that he had been too slow in his movements.³ Of a similar nature 88 are jests whose point lies in insinuation. Such was the reply which Cicero⁴ quotes as given to the man who complained that his wife had hung herself on a fig-tree. “I wish,” said someone, “you would give me a slip of that tree to plant.” For there the meaning is obvious, though it is not expressed in so many words. Indeed the essence of all wit lies in the 89 distortion of the true and natural meaning of words: a perfect instance of this is when we misrepresent our own or another’s opinions or assert some impossibility. Juba misrepresented another man’s opinion, 90 when he replied to one who complained of being bespattered by his horse, “What, do you think I am a Centaur?”⁵ Gaius Cassius misrepresented his own, when he said to a soldier whom he

¹ de Or. II. Ixviii. 275.

² ib. Ixix. 278.

³ The point of the jest, such as it is, is that Juba disclaims forming part of his horse. The reference is to Juba, historian and king of Mauretania, captured by Julius Caesar and restored by Augustus.

BOOK VI. III. 90-93

saw hurrying into battle without his sword, "Shew yourself a handy man with your fists, comrade." So too did Galba, when served with some fish that had been partially eaten the day before and had been placed on the table with the uneaten sides turned uppermost: "We must lose no time," he said, "for there are people under the table at work on the other side." Lastly there is the jibe that Cicero made against Curius, which I have already cited;¹ for it was clearly impossible that he should be still unborn at a time when he was already declaiming. There is also a form of misrepresentation which has 91 its basis in irony, of which a saying of Gaius Caesar will provide an example. A witness asserted that the accused attempted to wound him in the thighs, and although it would have been easy to ask him why he attacked that portion of his body above all others, he merely remarked, "What else could he have done, when you had a helmet and breast-plate?" Best of all is it when pretence is met by 92 pretence, as was done in the following instance by Domitius Afer. He had made his will long ago, and one of his more recent friends, in the hopes of securing a legacy if he could persuade him to change it, produced a fictitious story and asked him whether he should advise a senior centurion who, being an old man, had already made his will to revise it; to which Afer replied, "Don't do it: you will offend him."

But the most agreeable of all jests are those which 93 are good humoured and easily digested. Take another example from Afer. Noting that an ungrateful client avoided him in the forum, he sent his servant² to him to say, "I hope you are obliged to me for not having seen you." Again when his steward, being unable to account for certain sums of money, kept saying, "I have not eaten it: I live on bread and water," he replied, "Master sparrow, pay what you owe." Such jests the Greeks style *ὑπὸ τὸ ἥθος*¹ or adapted to character. It is a pleasant form of jest to reproach a person with less than would be possible, as Afer did when, in answer to a candidate who said, "I have always shown my respect for your family," he replied, although he might easily have denied the statement, "You are right, it is quite true." Sometimes it may be a good joke to speak of oneself, while one may often raise a laugh by reproaching a person to his face with things that it would have been merely bad-mannered to bring up against him behind his back. Of this kind was the remark made by Augustus, when a soldier was making some unreasonable request and Marcianus, whom he suspected of intending to make some no less unfair request, turned up at the same moment: "I will no more grant your request, comrade, than I will that which Marcianus is just going to make."

BOOK VI. III. 93-97

Apt quotation of verse may add to the effect of wit. The lines may be quoted in their entirety without alteration, which is so easy a task that Ovid composed an entire book against bad poets out of lines taken from the quatrains of Macer.² Such a procedure is rendered specially attractive if it be seasoned by a spice of ambiguity, as in the line which Cicero quoted against Lartius, a shrewd and cunning fellow who was suspected of unfair dealing in a certain case,

"Had not Ulysses Lartius intervened."³

Or the words may be slightly altered, as in the line quoted against the senator who, although he had always in previous times been regarded as an utter fool, was, after inheriting an estate, asked to speak first on a motion —

BOOK VI. III. 97-99

“What men call wisdom is a legacy,”¹

where legacy is substituted for the original faculty. Or again we may invent verses resembling well-known lines, a trick styled parody by the Greeks. A neat application of proverbs may also be effective, 98 as when one man replied to another, a worthless fellow, who had fallen down and asked to be helped to his feet, “Let someone pick you up who does not know you.”² Or we may shew our culture by drawing on legend for a jest, as Cicero did in the trial of Verres, when Hortensius said to him as he was examining a witness, “I do not understand these riddles.” “You ought to, then,” said Cicero, “as you have got the Sphinx at home.” Hortensius had received a bronze Sphinx of great value as a present from Verres.

Effects of mild absurdity are produced by the 99 simulation of folly and would, indeed, themselves, be foolish were they not fictitious. Take as an example the remark of the man who, when people wondered why he had bought a stumpy candlestick, said, “It will do for lunch.”³ There are also sayings closely resembling absurdities which derive great point from their sheer irrelevance, like the reply of Dolabella’s slave, who, on being asked whether his master had advertised a sale of his property, answered, “He has sold his house.”⁴

³ Lunch requiring a less elaborate service, but being in broad daylight.

⁴ i.e. how can he? he has nothing left to sell.

BOOK VI. III. 100-103

Sometimes you may get out of a tight corner by 100 giving a humorous explanation of your embarrassment, as the man did who asked a witness, who alleged that he had been wounded by the accused, whether he had any scar to show for it. The witness proceeded to show a huge scar on his thigh, on which he remarked, "I wish he had wounded you in the side."¹ A happy use may also be made of insult. Hispo, for example, when the accuser charged him with scandalous crimes, replied, "You judge my character by your own"; while Fulvius Propinquus, when asked by the representative of the emperor whether the documents which he produced were autographs, replied, "Yes, Sir, and the handwriting is genuine, too!"²

Such I have either learned from others or discovered 101 from my own experience to be the commonest sources of humour. But I must repeat that the number of ways in which one may speak wittily are of no less infinite variety than those in which one may speak seriously, for they depend on persons, place, time and chances, which are numberless. I 102 have, therefore, touched on the topics of humour that I may not be taxed with having omitted them; but with regard to my remarks on the actual practice and manner of jesting, I venture to assert that they are absolutely indispensable.

To these Domitius Marsus, who wrote an elaborate treatise on Urbanity, adds several types of saying, which are not laughable, but rather elegant sayings with a certain charm and attraction of their own, which are suitable even to speeches of the most serious kind: they are characterised by a certain urbane wit, but not of a kind to raise a laugh. And 103

as a matter of fact his work was not designed to deal with humour, but with urbane wit, a quality which he regards as peculiar to this city, though it was not till a late period that it was understood in this sense, after the word Urbs had come to be accepted as indicating Rome without the addition of any proper noun. He defines it as follows: "Urbanity is a certain quality of language compressed into the limits of a brief saying and adapted to delight and move men to every kind of emotion, but specially suitable to resistance or attack according as the person or circumstances concerned may demand." But this definition, if we except the quality of brevity, includes all the virtues of oratory. For it is entirely concerned with persons and things to deal with which in appropriate language is nothing more nor less than the task of perfect eloquence. Why he insisted on brevity being essential I do not know, since in the same book he asserts that many speakers have revealed their urbanity in narrative. And a little later he gives the following definition, which is, as he says, based on the views expressed by Cato: "Urbanity is the characteristic of a man who has produced many good sayings and replies, and who, whether in conversation, in social or convivial gatherings, in public speeches, or under any other circumstances, will speak with humour and appropriateness. If any orator do this, he will undoubtedly succeed in making his audience laugh." But if we accept these definitions, we shall have to allow the title of urbane to anything that is well said. It was natural therefore that the author of this definition should classify such sayings under three heads, serious, humorous and intermediate, since all good sayings may be thus classified. But, in my opinion, there are certain forms of humorous saying that may be regarded as not possessing sufficient urbanity. For to my thinking urbanity involves the total absence of all that is incongruous, coarse, unpolished and exotic whether in thought, language, voice or gesture, and resides not so much in isolated sayings as in the whole complexion of our language, just as for the Greeks Atticism means that elegance of taste which was peculiar to Athens. However, out of respect to the judgment of Marsus, who was a man of the greatest learning, I will add that he divides serious utterances into three classes, the honorific, the derogatory and the intermediate. As an example of the honorific he quotes the words uttered by Cicero in the *pro Ligario*¹ with reference to Caesar, "You who forget nothing save injuries." The derogatory he illustrates by the words used by Cicero of Pompey and Caesar in a letter to Atticus:² "I know whom to avoid, but whom to follow I know not." Finally, he illustrates the intermediate, which he calls apophthegmatic (as it is), by the passage from Cicero's speech against Catiline³ where he says, "Death can never be grievous to the brave nor premature for one who has been consul nor a calamity to one that is truly wise." All these are admirable sayings, but what special title they have to be called urbane I do not see. If it is not merely, as I think, the whole complexion of our oratory that deserves this title, but if it is to be claimed for individual sayings as well, I should give the name only to those sayings that are of the same general character as humorous sayings, without actually being humorous. I will give an illustration of what I mean. It was said of Asinius Pollio, who had equal gifts for being grave or gay, that he was "a man for all hours," and of a pleader 111 who was a fluent speaker extempore, that "his ability was all in ready money." Of the same kind, too, was the remark recorded by Marsus as having been made by Pompey to Cicero when the latter expressed distrust of his party: "Go over to Caesar and you will be afraid of me." Had this last remark been uttered on a less serious subject and with less serious purpose, or had it not been uttered by Pompey himself, we might have counted it among examples 112 of humour. I may also add the words used by Cicero in a letter¹ to Caerellia to explain why he endured the supremacy of Caesar so patiently: "These ills must either be endured with the courage of Cato or the stomach² of Cicero," for here again the word "stomach" has a spice of humour in it. I felt that I ought not to conceal my feelings on this point. If I am wrong in my views, I shall not, at any rate, lead my readers astray, since I have stated the opposite view as well, which they are at liberty to adopt if they prefer it.

IV. With regard to the principles to be observed in forensic debate,³ it might seem that I should delay such instructions until I had finished dealing with all the details of continuous speaking, since such debates come after the set speeches are done. But since the art of debate turns on invention alone, does not admit of arrangement, has little need for the embellishments of style, and makes no large demand on memory or delivery, I think that it will not be out of place to deal with it here before I proceed to the second of the five parts,⁴ since it is entirely dependent on the first. Other writers have omitted to deal with it on the ground perhaps that they thought the subject had been sufficiently covered by their precepts on other topics. For debate consists in attack and defence, on which enough has already been said, since whatever is useful in a continuous speech for the purpose of proof must necessarily be of service in this brief and discontinuous form of oratory. For we say the same things in debate, though we say them in a different manner, since debate consists of questions and replies, a topic with which we have dealt fairly exhaustively in connexion with the examination of witnesses.¹ But since this work is designed on an ample scale and since no one can be called a perfect orator unless he be an expert debater, we must devote a little special attention to this accomplishment as well, which as a matter of fact is not seldom the deciding factor in a forensic victory. For just as the continuous speech is the predominant weapon in general questions of quality (where the inquiry is as to whether an act was right or wrong), and as a rule is adequate to clear up questions of definition and almost all those in which the facts are ascertained or inferred by conjecture² from artificial proof,³ so on the other hand those cases, which are the most frequent of all and depend on proofs which are either entirely inartificial⁴ or of a composite character, give rise to the most violent debates; in fact I should say that there is no occasion when the advocate has to come to closer grips with his adversary. For all the strongest points of the argument have to be sharply impressed on the memory of the judge, while we have also to make good all the promises we may have made in the course of our speech and to refute the lies of our opponents. There is no point of a trial where the judge's attention is keener. And even mediocre speakers have not without some reason acquired the reputation of being good advocates simply by their excellence in debate. Some on the 6 other hand think they have done their duty to their clients by an ostentatious and fatiguing display of elaborate declamation and straightway march out of court attended by an applauding crowd and leave the desperate battle of debate to uneducated performers who often are of but humble origin. As a result 7 in private suits you will generally find that different counsel are employed to plead and to prove the case. If the duties of advocacy are to be thus divided, the latter duty must surely be accounted the more important of the two, and it is a disgrace to oratory that inferior advocates should be regarded as adequate to render the greater service to the litigants. In public cases at any rate the actual pleader is cited by the usher as well as the other advocates.¹

For debate the chief requisites are a quick and nimble understanding and a shrewd and ready judgment. For there is no time to think; the advocate must speak at once and return the blow almost before it has been dealt by his opponent. Consequently while it is most important for every portion of the case that the advocate should not merely have given a careful study to the whole case, but that he should have it at his fingers' ends, when he comes to the debate it is absolutely necessary that he should possess a thorough acquaintance with all the persons, instruments and circumstances of time and place involved: otherwise he will often be reduced.

to silence and forced to give a hurried assent to those who prompt him as to what he should say, suggestions which are often perfectly fatuous owing to excess of zeal on the part of the prompter. As a result it sometimes happens that we are put to the blush by too ready acceptance of the foolish suggestions of another. Moreover, we have to deal with others beside these prompters who speak for our ear alone. Some go so far as to turn the debate into an open brawl. For you may sometimes see several persons shouting angrily at the judge and telling him that the arguments thus suggested are contrary to the truth, and calling his attention to the fact that some point which is prejudicial to the case has been deliberately passed over in silence. Consequently the skilled debater must be able to control his tendency to anger; there is no passion that is a greater enemy to reason, while it often leads an advocate right away from the point and forces him both to use gross and insulting language and to receive it in return; occasionally it will even excite him to such an extent as to attack the judges. Moderation, and sometimes even longsuffering, is the better policy, for the statements of our opponents have not merely to be refuted: they are often best treated with contempt, made light of or held up to ridicule, methods which afford unique opportunity for the display of wit. This injunction, however, applies only so long as the case is conducted with order and decency: if, on the other hand, our opponents adopt turbulent methods we must put on a bold front and resist their impudence with courage. For there are some advocates so brazen-faced that they bluster and bellow at us, interrupt us in the middle of a sentence:

and try to throw everything into confusion. While, then, it would be wrong to pay them the compliment of imitation, we must none the less repel their onslaughts with vigour by crushing their insolence and making frequent appeals to the judges or presiding magistrates to insist on the observance of the proper order of speaking. The debater's task is not one that suits a meek temper or excessive modesty, and we are apt to be misled because that which is really weakness is dignified by the name of honesty. But the quality which is the most service- 12 able in debate is acumen, which while it is not the result of art (for natural gifts cannot be taught), may none the less be improved by art. In this 13 connexion the chief essential is never for a moment to lose sight either of the question at issue or the end which we have in view. If we bear this in mind, we shall never descend to mere brawling nor waste the time allotted to the case by indulging in abuse, while we shall rejoice if our adversary does so.

Those who have given a careful study to the ar- 14 guments that are likely to be produced by their opponents or the replies which may be made by themselves are almost always ready for the fray. There is, however, a further device available which consists in suddenly introducing into the debate arguments which were deliberately concealed in our set speech: it is a procedure which resembles a surprise attack or a sally from an ambush. The occasion for its employment arises when there is some point to which it is difficult to improvise an answer, though it would not be difficult to meet if time were allowed for consideration. For solid and irrefutable

BOOK VI. iv. 14-18

arguments are best produced at once in the actual pleading in order that they may be repeated and treated at greater length. I think I need hardly 15 insist on the necessity for the avoidance in debate of mere violence and noise and such forms of pleasantry as are dear to the uneducated. For unscrupulous violence, although annoying to one's antagonist, makes an unpleasant impression on the judge. It is also bad policy to fight hard for points which you cannot prove. For where defeat is inevitable, it is 16 wisest to yield, since, if there are a number of other points in dispute, we shall find it easier to prove what remains, while if there is only one point at issue, surrender with a good grace will generally secure some mitigation of punishment. For obstinacy in the defence of a fault, more especially after detection, is simply the commission of a fresh fault.

While the battle still rages, the task of luring on 17 our adversary when he has once committed himself to error, and of forcing him to commit himself as deeply as possible, even to the extent at times of being puffed up with extravagant hopes of success, requires great prudence and skill. It is, therefore, wise to conceal some of our weapons: for our opponents will often press their attack and stake everything on some imagined weakness of our own, and will give fresh weight to our proofs by the instancy with which they demand us to produce them. It may even be expedient to yield ground 18 which the enemy thinks advantageous to himself: for in grasping at the fancied advantage he may be forced to surrender some greater advantage: at times, too, it may serve our purpose to give him a choice between two alternatives, neither of which he can select without damage to his cause. Such a course is more effective in debate than in a set speech, for the reason that in the latter we reply to ourselves,¹ while in the former our opponent replies, and thereby delivers himself into our hands. It is, above all, the mark of a shrewd debater to perceive what remarks impress the judge and what he rejects; this may often be detected from his looks, and sometimes from some action or utterance. Arguments which help us must be pressed home, while it will be wise to withdraw as gently as possible from such as are of no service. We may take a lesson from doctors who continue or cease to administer remedies according as they note that they are received or rejected by the stomach. Sometimes, if we find difficulty in developing our point, it is desirable to raise another question and to divert the attention of the judge to it if this be feasible. For what can you do, if you are unable to answer an argument, save invent another to which your opponent can give no answer? In most respects the rules to be observed in debate are, as I have said,² identical with those for the cross-examination of witnesses, the only difference lying in the fact that the debate is a battle between advocates, whereas cross-examination is a fight between advocate and witness.

To practise the art of debate is, however, far easier. For it is most profitable to agree with a fellow-student on some subject, real or fictitious, and to take different sides, debating it as would be done in the courts. The same may also be done with the simpler class of questions.³ I would further have an advocate realise the order in which his proofs should be presented to the judge: the method to be followed is the same as in arguments: the strongest should be placed first and last. For those which are presented first dispose the judge to believe us, and those which come last to decide in our favour.

V. Having dealt with these points to the best of my ability, I should have had no hesitation in proceeding to discuss arrangement, which is logically the next consideration, did I not fear that, since there are some who include judgment¹ under the head of invention, they might think that I had deliberately omitted all discussion of judgment, although personally I regard it as so inextricably blent with and involved in every portion of this work, that its influence extends even to single sentences or words, and it is no more possible to teach it than it is to instruct the powers of taste and smell. Consequently, all I can do is now and hereafter to show what should be done or avoided in each particular case, with a view thereby to guide the judgment. What use then is it for me to lay down general rules to the effect that we should not attempt impossibilities, that we should avoid whatever contradicts our case or is common to both, and shun all incorrectness or obscurity of style? In all these cases it is common sense that must decide, and common sense cannot be taught.

There is no great difference, in my opinion,³ between judgment and sagacity, except that the former deals with evident facts, while the latter is concerned with hidden facts or such as have not yet been discovered or still remain in doubt. Again judgment is more often than not a matter of certainty, while sagacity is a form of reasoning from deep-lying premises, which generally weighs and compares a number of arguments and in itself involves both invention and judgment. But here 4 again you must not expect me to lay down any general rules. For sagacity depends on circumstances and will often find its scope in something preceding the pleading of the cause. For instance in the prosecution of Verres Cicero seems to have shown the highest sagacity in preferring to cut down the time available for his speech rather than allow the trial to be postponed to the following year when Quintus Hortensius was to be consul. And again in the 5 actual pleading sagacity holds the first and most important place. For it is the duty of sagacity to decide what we should say and what we should pass by in silence or postpone; whether it is better to deny an act or to defend it, when we should employ an exordium and on what lines it should be designed, whether we should make a statement of facts and if so, how, whether we should base our plea on law or equity and what is the best order to adopt, while it must also decide on all the nuances of style, and settle whether it is expedient to speak harshly, gently or even with humility. But I have already 6 given advice on all these points as far as each occasion permitted, and I shall continue to do the same in the subsequent portions of this work. In the meantime, however, I will give a few instances to make my meaning clearer, since it is not possible, in my opinion, to do so by laying down general rules. We praise Demosthenes¹ for his sagacity because 7 when he urged a policy of war upon the Athenians after they had met with a series of reverses, he pointed out that so far their action had been entirely irrational. For they might still make amends for their negligence, whereas, if they had made no mistakes, they would have had no ground for hopes of better success in the future. Again,¹ since he feared to 8 give offence if he taxed the people with lack of energy in defending the liberties of their country, he preferred to praise their ancestors for their courageous policy. Thus he gained a ready hearing, with the natural result that the pride which they felt in the heroic past made them repent of their own degenerate behaviour. If we turn to Cicero, we 9 shall find that one speech alone, the pro Cluentio, will suffice to provide a number of examples. The difficulty is to know what special exhibition of sagacity to admire most in this speech. His opening statement of the case, by which he discredited the mother whose authority pressed so hardly on her son?² The fact that he preferred to throw the charge of having bribed the jury back upon his opponents rather than deny it on account of what he calls the notorious infamy of the verdict?³ Or his recourse, last of all, to the support of the law in spite of the odious nature of the affair, a method by which he would have set the judges against him but for the fact that he had already softened their feelings towards him?⁴ Or the skill which he shows in stating that he has adopted this course in spite of the protests of his client?⁵ What again am I to select as 10 an outstanding instance of his sagacity in the pro Milone? The fact that he refrains from proceeding to his statement of facts until he has cleared the ground by disposing of the previous verdicts against the accused?⁶ The manner in which he turns the odium of the attempted ambush against Clodius, although as a matter of fact the encounter was a pure chance? The way in which he at one and the same time praised the actual deed and showed that it was forced upon his client? Or the skill with which he avoided making Milo plead for consideration and undertook the rôle of suppliant himself? ¹ It would be an endless task to quote all the instances of his sagacity, how he discredited Cotta,² how he put forward his own case in defence of Ligarius³ and saved Cornelius⁴ by his bold admission of the facts. It is enough, I think, to say that there is nothing ¹¹ not merely in oratory, but in all the tasks of life that is more important than sagacity and that without it all formal instruction is given in vain, while prudence unsupported by learning will accomplish more than learning unsupported by prudence. It is sagacity again that teaches us to adapt our speech to circumstances of time and place and to the persons with whom we are concerned. But since this topic covers a wide field and is intimately connected with eloquence itself, I shall reserve my treatment of it till I come to give instructions on the subject of appropriateness in speaking.⁵

BOOK VI. v. 3-7

BOOK VI. v. 7-10

THE INSTITUTIO ORATORIA OF QUINTILIAN

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

H. E. BUTLER, M.A.,

PROFESSOR OF LATIN IN LONDON UNIVERSITY

IN FOUR VOLUMES

II

LONDON : WILLIAM HEINEMANN
NEW YORK : G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

MCMXXI

M. FABII QUINTILIANI INSTITUTIONIS ORATORIAE

LIBER IV

PROOEMIUM

PERFECTO, Marcelle Victori, operis tibi dedicati tertio libro et iam quarta fere laboris parte transacta, nova insuper mihi diligentiae causa et altior sollicitudo, quale iudicium hominum emereret, accessit. Adhuc enim velut studia inter nos conferebamus, et si parum nostra institutio probaretur a ceteris, contenti fore domestico usu videbamur, ut tui meique
2 filii formare disciplinam satis putaremus. Cum vero mihi Domitianus Augustus sororis suae nepotum delegaverit curam, non satis honorem iudiciorum caelestium intelligam, nisi ex hoc oneris quoque
3 magnitudinem metiar. Quis enim mihi aut mores excolendi sit modus, ut eos non immerito probaverit sanctissimus censor? aut studia, ne fefellisse in iis

QUINTILIAN

videar principem ut in omnibus, ita in eloquentia
4 quoque eminentissimum? Quodsi nemo miratur poetas maximos saepe fecisse, ut non solum initiis operum suorum Musas invocarent, sed propecti quoque longius, cum ad aliquem graviozem venissent locum, repeterent vota et velut nova precatione 5 uterentur, mihi quoque profecto poterit ignosci, si, quod initio, quo primum hanc materiam inchoavi,
non feceram, nunc omnes in auxilium deos ipsumque
in primis, quo neque praesentius aliud nec studiis magis propitium numen est, invocem, ut, quantum
nobis expectationis adiecit, tantum ingenii adspiret dexterque ac volens adsit et me qualem esse credidit 6 faciat. Cuius mihi religionis non haec sola ratio, quae maxima est, sed alioqui sic procedit ipsum
opus, ut maiora praeteritis ac magis ardua sint, quae ingredior. Sequitur enim, ut iudicialium causarum, quae sunt maxime variae ac multiplices, ordo explicetur: quod prooemii sit officium, quae ratio narrandi, quae probationum fides, seu pro-posita confirmamus sive contra dicta dissolvimus, quanta vis in perorando, seu reficienda brevi repe-titione rerum memoria est iudicis sive adfectus 7 (quod est longe potentissimum) commovendi. De quibus partibus singulis quidam separatim scribere maluerunt velut onus totius corporis veriti, et sic

QUINTILIAN

quoque complures de unaquaque earum libros ediderunt; quas ego omnes ausus contexere prope infinitum laborem prospicio et ipsa cogitatione suscepti muneris fatigor. Sed durandum est, quia coepimus, et si viribus deficiemur, animo tamen perseverandum.

I. Quod, principium Latine vel exordium dicitur, maiore quadam ratione Graeci videntur προοίμιον nominasse, quia a nostris initium modo significatur, illi satis clare partem hanc esse ante ingressum rei
2 de qua dicendum sit, ostendunt. Nam sive propterea quod οἴμη cantus est et citharoedi pauca illa, quae, antequam legitimum certamen inchoent, emendi favoris gratia canunt, prooemium cognominaverunt, oratores quoque ea quae, priusquam causam exordiantur, ad conciliandos sibi iudicum animos
3 praeloquuntur eadem appellatione signarunt; sive, quod οἶμον iidem Graeci viam appellant, id quod ante ingressum rei ponitur sic vocare est institutum: certe prooemium est, quod apud iudicem dici, priusquam causam cognoverit, possit; vitioseque in scholis facimus, quod exordio semper sic utimur, quasi
4 causam iudex iam noverit. Cuius rei licentia ex hoc est, quod ante declamationem illa velut imago litis exponitur. Sed in foro quoque contingere istud principiorum genus secundis actionibus potest; primis quidem raro unquam, nisi forte apud eum, cui res iam aliunde nota sit, dicimus.

QUINTILIAN

5 Causa principii nulla alia est, quam ut auditorem, quo sit nobis in ceteris partibus accommodator, prae-paremus. Id fieri tribus maxime rebus inter auctores plurimos constat, si benevolum, attentum, docilem fecerimus, non quia ista non per totam
actionem sint custodienda, sed quia initiis praecipue necessaria, per quae in animum iudicis, ut procedere ultra possimus, admittimur.

6 Benevolentiam aut a personis ducimus aut a causis accipimus. Sed personarum non est, ut plerique crediderunt, triplex ratio, ex litigatore et adversario

7 et iudice. Nam exordium duci nonnunquam etiam ab actore causae solet. Quanquam enim pauciora de se ipso dicit et parcius, plurimum tamen ad omnia momenti est in hoc positum, si vir bonus creditur.
Sic enim continget, ut non studium advocati videatur adferre sed paene testis fidem. Quare in primis existimetur venisse ad agendum ductus officio vel cognitionis vel amicitiae maximeque, si fieri poterit, reipublicae aut alicuius certe non mediocris exempli.
Quod sine dubio multo magis ipsis litigatoribus

QUINTILIAN

- faciendum est, ut ad agendum magna atque honesta ratione aut etiam necessitate accessisse videantur.
- 8 Sed ut praecipua in hoc dicentis auctoritas, si omnis in subeundo negotio suspicio sordium aut odiorum aut ambitionis afuerit, ita quaedam in his quoque commendatio tacita, si nos infirmos, imparatos, impares agentium contra ingeniis dixerimus, qualia
- 9 sunt pleraque Messalae prooemia. Est enim naturalis favor pro laborantibus, et iudex religiosus libentissime patronum audit, quem iustitiae suae minime timet. Inde illa veterum circa occultandam eloquentiam simulatio multum ab hac nostrorum
- 10 temporum iactatione diversa. Vitandum etiam, ne contumeliosi, maligni, superbi, maledici in quemquam hominem ordinemve videamur praecipueque eorum, qui laedi nisi adversa iudicum voluntate non
- 11 possunt. Nam in iudicem ne quid dicatur non modo palam sed quod omnino intelligi possit, stultum erat monere, nisi fieret. Etiam partis adversae patronus dabit exordio materiam, interim cum honore, si eloquentiam eius et gratiam nos timere fingendo, ut ea suspecta sint iudici, fecerimus, interim per contumeliam, sed hoc perquam raro, ut Asinius pro Urbiniae¹ heredibus Labienum adversarii patronum inter argumenta causae malae posuit.

¹ cp. VII. ii. 4 and 26.

QUINTILIAN

- 12 Negat haec esse prooemia Cornelius Celsus, quia sint extra litem. Sed ego cum auctoritate summorum oratorum magis ducor, tum pertinere ad causam puto quidquid ad dicentem pertinet, cum sit naturale, ut iudices iis, quos libentius audiunt, etiam
- 13 facilius credant. Ipsius autem litigatoris persona tractanda variè est. Nam tum dignitas eius adlegatur, tum commendatur infirmitas. Nonnunquam contingit relatio meritorum, de quibus verecundius dicendum erit sua quam aliena laudanti. Multum agit sexus, aetas, condicio, ut in feminis, senibus, pupillis, liberos, parentes, coniuges adlegantibus.
- 14 Nam sola rectum quoque iudicem inclinat miseratio. Degustanda tamen haec prooemio, non consumenda. Adversarii vero persona prope iisdem omnibus, sed e contrario ductis impugnari solet. Nam et potentes sequitur invidia et humiles abiectosque contemptus et turpes ac nocentes odium, quae tria sunt ad
- 15 alienandos iudicum animos potentissima. Neque haec dicere sat est, quod datur etiam imperitis; pleraque augenda aut minuenda, ut expediet. Hoc enim oratoris est, illa causae.
- 16 Iudicem conciliabimus nobis non tantum laudando eum, quod et fieri cum modo debet et est tamen

QUINTILIAN

- parti utrique commune, sed si laudem eius ad utilitatem causae nostrae coniunxerimus, ut adlegemus pro honestis dignitatem illi suam, pro humilibus iustitiam, pro infelicibus misericordiam, pro
- 17 laesis severitatem et similiter cetera. Mores quoque, si fieri potest, iudicis velim nosse. Nam prout asperi, lenes, iucundi, graves, duri, remissi erunt, aut adsumere in causam naturas eorum, qua competent, aut mitigare, qua repugnabunt, oportebit.
- 18 Accidit autem interim hoc quoque, ut aut nobis inimicus aut adversariis sit amicus qui iudicat; quae res utrique parti tractanda est ac nescio an etiam ei magis, in quam videatur propensior. Est enim nonnunquam pravis hic ambitus adversus amicos aut pro iis, quibuscum simultates gerant, pronuntiandi faciendique iniuste, ne fecisse videantur.
- 19 Fuerunt etiam quidam rerum suarum iudices. Nam et in libris Observationum a Septimio editis adfuisse Ciceronem tali causae invenio, et ego pro regina Berenice apud ipsam eam causam dixi. Similis hic quoque superioribus ratio est. Adversarius enim fiduciam partis suae iactat, patronus

QUINTILIAN

- 20 timet cognoscentis verecundiam. Praeterea detrahenda vel confirmanda opinio, praecipue si quam domo videbitur iudex attulisse. Metus etiam nonnunquam est amovendus, ut Cicero pro Milone, ne arma Pompeii disposita contra se putarent, laboravit; nonnunquam adhibendus, ut idem in Verrem facit.
- 21 Sed adhibendi modus alter ille frequens et favorabilis: ne male sentiat populus Romanus, ne iudicia transferantur; alter autem asper et rarus, quo minatur corruptis accusationem, et id quidem in consilio ampliore utcunque tutius; nam et mali inhibentur et boni gaudent; apud singulos vero
- 22 nunquam suaserim, nisi defecerint omnia. Quod si necessitas exigit, non erit iam ex arte oratoria, non magis quam appellare, etiamsi id quoque saepe utile est, aut, antequam pronuntiet, reum facere; nam et minari et deferre etiam non orator potest.
- 23 Si causa conciliandi nobis iudicis materiam dabit, ex hac potissimum aliqua in usum principii, quae maxime favorabilia videbuntur, decerpi oportebit.

¹ i. 15.

² e.g. in the Verrines Cicero points out to the jury, then drawn entirely from senators, that they are on their trial. If they fail in their duty, the constitution of the panels will be altered and the equites be admitted as well.

QUINTILIAN

Quo in loco Verginius fallitur, qui Theodoro placere tradit, ut ex singulis quaestionibus singuli sensus
24 in prooemium conferantur. / Nam ille non hoc dicit, sed ad potentissimas quaestiones iudicem praeparandum; in quo vitii nihil erat, nisi in universum id praeciperet, quod nec omnis quaestio patitur nec
← omnis causa desiderat. \ Nam protinus a petitore primo loco, dum ignota iudici lis est, quomodo ex quaestionibus ducemus sententias? nimirum res erunt indicandae prius. Demus aliquas (nam id exiget ratio nonnunquam); etiamne potentissimas omnes, id est totam causam? sic erit in prooemio
25 peracta narratio. Quid vero? si, ut frequenter accidit, paulo est durior causa, non benevolentia iudicis petenda ex aliis partibus erit, sed non ante conciliato eius animo nuda quaestionum committetur asperitas? Quae si recte semper initio dicendi
26 tractarentur, nihil prooemio opus esset. Aliqua ergo nonnunquam, quae erunt ad conciliandum nobis iudicem potentissima, non inutiliter interim ex quaestionibus in exordio locabuntur. Quae sint

QUINTILIAN

porro in causis favorabilia, enumerare non est necesse, quia et manifesta erunt cognita cuiusque controversiae condicione et omnia colligi in tanta
27 litium varietate non possunt. Ut autem haec invenire et augere, ita quod laedit aut omnino repellere aut certe minuere ex causa est. Miseratio quoque aliquando ex eadem venit, sive quid passi
28 sumus grave sive passuri. Neque enim sum in hac opinione, qua quidam, ut eo distare prooemium ab epilogo credam, quod in hoc praeterita, in illo futura dicantur, sed quod in ingressu parcius et modestius praetemptanda sit iudicis misericordia, in epilogo vero liceat totos effundere adfectus et fictam orationem induere personis et defunctos excitare et pignora reorum producere; quae minus in exordiis
29 sunt usitata. Sed haec, quae supra dixi, non movere tantum, verum ex diverso amoliri quoque prooemio opus est. Ut autem nostrum miserabilem, si vincamur, exitum, ita adversariorum superbum, si vicerint, utile est credi.

30 Sed ex iis quoque, quae non sunt personarum nec causarum, verum adiuncta personis et causis, duci prooemia solent. Personis applicantur non pignora modo, de quibus supra dixi, sed propinquitates, amicitiae, interim regiones etiam civitatesque, et si quid aliud eius quem defendimus casu laedi potest.

QUINTILIAN

- 31 Ad causam extra pertinent tempus, unde principium pro Caelio; locus, unde pro Deiotaro; habitus, unde pro Milone; opinio, unde in Verrem; deinceps, ne omnia enumerem, infamia iudiciorum, expectatio vulgi; nihil enim horum in causa est, ad causam
- 32 tamen pertinent. Adiicit Theophrastus ab oratione principium, quale videtur esse Demosthenis pro Ctesiphonte, ut sibi dicere suo potius arbitrio liceat rogantis quam eo modo, quem actione accusator praescripserit.
- 33 Fiducia ipsa solet opinione arrogantiae laborare. Faciunt favorem et illa paene communia non tamen omittenda, vel ideo ne occupentur, optare, abominari, rogare, sollicitum agere; quia plerumque attentum iudicem facit, si res agi videtur nova, magna, atrox, pertinens ad exemplum, praecipue tamen, si iudex aut sua vice aut reipublicae commovetur, cuius animus

¹ In the pro Caelio (c. 1) Cicero calls attention to the fact that the trial is taking place during a festival, all other legal business being suspended. In the pro Deiotaro (c. 2) he calls attention to the unusual surroundings, the speech being delivered in a private house. For the pro Milone see § 20 of this chapter. In the first Verrine (c. 1) he remarks that

QUINTILIAN

- spe, metu, admonitione, precibus, vanitate denique, 34 si id profuturum credimus, agitandus est. Sunt et illa excitandis ad audiendum non inutilia, si nos neque
diu moraturos neque extra causam dicturos existiment.
Docilem sine dubio et haec ipsa praestat attentio; sed et illud, si breviter et dilucide summam rei, de qua cognoscere debeat, indicaverimus, quod Homerus atque 35 Vergilius operum suorum principiis faciunt. Nam is eius rei modus est, ut propositioni similior sit quam expositioni, nec quomodo quidque sit actum, sed de quibus dicturus sit orator ostendat. Nec video, quod huius rei possit apud oratores reperiri melius exemplum 36 quam Ciceronis pro A. Cluentio: Animadverti, iudices, omnem accusatoris orationem in duas divisam esse partes;
quarum altera mihi inniti et magnopere confidere videbatur invidia iam inveterata iudicii Iuniani, altera tantummodo consuetudinis causa timide et diffidenter attingere rationem veneficii criminum, qua de re lege est haec quaestio constituta. Id tamen totum respondententi facilius est quam proponenti, quia hic admonendus iudex, illic 37 docendus est. Nec me quanquam magni auctores in hoc duxerint, ut non semper facere attentum ac

QUINTILIAN

docilem iudicem velim ; non quia nesciam, id quod ab illis dicitur, esse pro mala causa, qualis ea sit non intelligi, verum quia istud non negligentia iudicis contingit, sed errore. Dixit enim adversarius et fortasse persuasit ; nobis opus est eius diversa opinione, quae mutari non potest, nisi illum fecerimus ad ea quae dicemus docilem et intentum. Quid ergo est? Imminuenda quaedam et levanda et quasi contemnenda esse consensio ad remittendam intentionem iudicis, quam adversario praestat, ut fecit pro Ligario 38
 39 Cicero. Quid enim agebat aliud ironia illa, quam ut Caesar minus se in rem tanquam non novam intenderet? Quid pro Caelio, quam ut res expectatione minor videretur?

Verum ex iis, quae proposuimus, aliud in alio
 40 genere causae desiderari palam est. Genera porro causarum plurimi quinque fecerunt, honestum, humile, dubium vel anceps, admirabile, obscurum : id est ἔνδοξον, ἄδοξον, ἀμφίδοξον, παράδοξον, δυσπαροκολούητον. Sunt quibus recte videtur adiici turpe, 41 quod alii humili, alii admirabili subiiciunt. Admirabile autem vocant, quod est praeter opinionem hominum constitutum. In ancipiti maxime benevolum iudicem, in obscuro docilem, in humili

¹ pro Cael. 31.

QUINTILIAN

attentum parare debemus. Nam honestum quidem ad conciliationem satis per se valet, admirabili et turpi remediis opus est.

- 42 Eo quidam exordium in duas dividunt partes, principium et insinuationem, ut sit in principiis recta benevolentiae et attentionis postulatio; quae quia esse in turpi causae genere non possit, insinuatio surrepat animis, maxime ubi frons causae non satis honesta est, vel quia res sit improba vel quia hominibus parum probetur, aut si facie quoque ipsa premitur vel invidiosa consistentis ex diverso patroni,
- 43 aut patris vel miserabili senis, caeci, infantis. Et quidem quibus adversus haec modis sit medendum, verbosius tradunt materiasque sibi ipsi fingunt et ad morem actionum persequuntur; sed hae cum oriantur ex causis, quarum species consequi omnes non possumus, nisi generaliter comprehenduntur, in infinitum
- 44 sunt extrahendae. Quare singulis consilium ex propria ratione nascetur. Illud in universum praeceperim, ut ab his quae laedunt ad ea quae prosunt refugiamus. Si causa laborabimus, persona subveniat;

QUINTILIAN

si persona, causa; si nihil quod nos adiuvet erit, quaeramus quid adversarium laedat; nam ut optabile 45 est plus favoris mereri, sic proximum odii minus. In iis, quae negari non potuerint, elaborandum, ut aut minora quam dictum est aut alia mente facta aut
nihil ad praesentem quaestionem pertinere aut emendari posse paenitentia aut satis iam punita videantur.) Ideoque agere avvocato quam litigatori X facilius, quia et laudat sine arrogantiae crimine et 46 aliquando utiliter etiam reprehendere potest. Nam se quoque moveri interim finget, ut pro Rabirio Postumo Cicero, dum aditum sibi ad aures faciat et auctoritatem induat vera sentientis, quo magis credatur vel defendenti eadem vel neganti. Ideoque hoc primum intuebimur, litigatoris an advocati persona sit utendum, quotiens utrumque fieri potest; nam id in schola liberum est, in foro rarum, ut sit idoneus 47 suae rei quisque defensor. Declamaturus autem maxime positas in adfectibus causas propriis personis debet induere. Hi sunt enim, qui mandari non

¹ pro Rab. i. l.

QUINTILIAN

possunt, nec eadem vi profertur alieni animi qua sui 48 motus. His etiam de causis insinuatione videtur opus esse, si adversarii actio iudicum animos occupavit, si dicendum apud fatigatos est; quorum alterum pro-mittendo nostras probationes et adversas eludendo
vitabimus, alterum et spe brevitatis et iis, quibus 49 attentum fieri iudicem docuimus. Et urbanitas opportuna reficit animos et undecunque petita iudicis voluptas levat taedium. Non inutilis etiam est ratio occupandi quae videntur obstare, ut Cicero dicit, scire se mirari quosdam, quod is, qui per tot annos defenderit multos, laeserit neminem,
ad accusandum Verrem descenderit; deinde ostendit,
hanc ipsam esse sociorum defensionem; quod schema 50 πρόληψις dicitur. Id cum sit utile aliquando, nunc a declamatoribus quibusdam paene semper adsumitur, qui fas non putant nisi a contrario incipere.

Negant Apollodorum secuti tris esse, de quibus supra diximus, praeparandi iudicis partes; sed multas species enumerant, ut ex moribus iudicis, ex opinionibus

¹ Div. in Caec. i. 1.

QUINTILIAN

bus ad causam extra pertinentibus, ex opinione de ipsa causa, quae sunt prope infinitae, tum iis, ex quibus omnes controversiae constant, personis, factis, dictis, causis, temporibus, locis, occasionibus, ceteris.

51 Quas veras esse fateor, sed in haec genera recidere. Nam si iudicem benevolum, attentum, docilem habeo, quid amplius debeam optare, non reperio; cum metus ipse, qui maxime videtur esse extra haec, et attentum iudicem faciat et ab adverso favore deterreat.

52 Verum quoniam non est satis demonstrare discen-tibus, quae sint in ratione prooemii, sed dicendum etiam, quomodo perfici facillime possint, hoc adiicio, ut dicturus intueatur, quid, apud quem, pro quo, contra quem, quo tempore, quo loco, quo rerum statu, qua vulgi fama dicendum sit, quid iudicem sentire credibile sit, antequam incipimus, tum quid aut desideremus aut deprecemur. Ipsa illum natura eo ducet, 53 ut sciat, quid primum dicendum sit. At nunc omne, quo coeperunt, prooemium putant et, ut quidque succurrit, utique si aliqua sententia blandiatur, exordium. Multa autem sine dubio sunt et aliis partibus causae communia, nihil tamen in quaque melius dicitur, quam quod aequè bene dici alibi non possit.

QUINTILIAN

- 54 Multum gratiae exordio est, quod ab actione diversae partis materiam trahit, hoc ipso, quod non compositum domi, sed ibi atque ex re natum, et facilitate famam ingenii auget et facie simplicis sumptique ex proximo sermonis fidem quoque acquirit; adeo ut, etiamsi reliqua scripta atque elaborata sint, tamen plerumque videatur tota extemporalis oratio, cuius initium nihil praeparati habuisse manifestum est.
- 55 Frequentissime vero prooemium decebit et sententiarum et compositionis et vocis et vultus modestia, adeo ut in genere causae etiam indubitabili fiducia se ipsa nimium exserere non debeat. Odit enim iudex fere litigantis securitatem, cumque ius suum intelligat, tacitus reverentiam postulat. Nec minus diligenter ne suspecti simus illa¹ parte vitandum est, propter quod minime ostentari debet in principiis cura, quia videtur ars omnis dicentis contra iudicem
- 56 gat, tacitus reverentiam postulat. Nec minus diligenter ne suspecti simus illa¹ parte vitandum est, propter quod minime ostentari debet in principiis cura, quia videtur ars omnis dicentis contra iudicem
- 57 adhiberi. Sed ipsum istud evitare summae artis est. Nam id sine dubio ab omnibus et quidem optime praeceptum est, verum aliquatenus temporum conditione mutatur, quia iam quibusdam in iudiciis maximeque capitalibus aut apud centumviros ipsi iudices exigunt sollicitas et accuratas actiones, con-

¹ The court of the centumviri was specially concerned with cases of inheritance.

QUINTILIAN

- temnique se, nisi in dicendo etiam diligentia appareat, credunt, nec doceri tantum sed etiam delectari volunt.
- 58 Et est difficilis huius rei moderatio, quae tamen temperari ita potest, ut videamur accurate non callide dicere. Illud ex praeceptis veteribus manet, ne quod insolens verbum, ne audacius translatum, ne aut ab obsoleta vetustate aut poetica licentia sumptum in
- 59 principio deprehendatur. Nondum enim recepti sumus, et custodit nos recens audientium intentio; magis conciliatis animis et iam calentibus haec libertas feretur, maximeque cum in locos fuerimus ingressi, quorum naturalis ubertas licentiam verbi notari cir-
- 60 cumfuso nitore non patitur. Nec argumentis autem nec locis nec narrationi similis esse in prooemio debet oratio, neque tamen deducta semper atque circumlita, sed saepe simplici atque illaboratae similis, nec verbis vultuque nimia promittens. Dissimulata enim et, ut Graeci dicunt, ἀνεπίφατος actio melius saepe surrepit. Sed haec, prout formari animum iudicium expedit.
- 61 Turbari memoria vel continuandi verba facultate destitui nusquam turpius, cum vitiosum prooemium

¹ i.e. unobtrusive.

QUINTILIAN

possit videri cicatricosa facies, et pessimus certe gubernator qui navem, dum portu egreditur, im-62 pegit. Modus autem principiū pro causa. Nam breve simplices, longius perplexae suspectaeque et infames desiderant. Ridendi vero, qui velut legem prooemiis omnibus dederunt, ut intra quattuor sensus terminarentur. Nec minus evitanda est immodica eius longitudo, ne in caput excrevisse videatur et 63 quo praeparare debet fatiget. Sermonem a persona iudicis aversum, quae ἀποστροφή dicitur, quidam in totum a prooemio summovent, nonnulla quidem in hanc persuasionem ratione ducti. Nam prorsus esse hoc magis secundum naturam confitendum est, ut eos alloquamur potissimum, quos conciliare nobis
64 studemus. Interim tamen et est prooemio necessarius sensus aliquis, et hic acrior fit atque vehementior ad personam directus alterius. Quod si accidat, quo iure aut qua tanta superstitione prohibeamur
65 dare per hanc figuram sententiae vires? Neque enim istud scriptores artium, quia non liceat, sed quia non putent utile, vetant. Ita si vincet utilitas, propter eandem causam facere debemus propter 66 quam vetamur. Et Demosthenes autem ad Aeschi-40

QUINTILIAN

- nen orationem in prooemio convertit, et M. Tullius, cum pro aliis quibusdam, ad quos ei visum est, tum
- 67 pro Ligario ad Tuberonem; nam erat multo futura languidior, si esset aliter figurata. Quod facilius cognoscet, si quis totam illam partem vehementissimam, cuius haec forma est, Habes igitur, Tubero, quod est accusatori maxime optandum, et cetera convertat ad iudicem; tum enim vere aversa videatur oratio et languescat vis omnis, dicentibus nobis Habet igitur Tubero, quod est accusatori maxime optandum.
- 68 Illo enim modo pressit atque institit, hoc tantum indicasset. Quod idem in Demosthene, si flexum illum mutaveris, accidit. Quid? non Sallustius directo ad Ciceronem, in quem ipsum dicebat, usus est principio, et quidem protinus? Graviter et iniquo animo maledicta tua paterer, Marce Tulli, sicut Cicero
- 69 fecerat in Catilinam: Quousque tandem abulere? Ac, ne quis apostrophēn miretur, idem Cicero pro Scauro ambitus reo, quae causa est in commentariis (nam bis eundem defendit), prosopopoeia loquentis pro reo utitur, pro Rabirio vero Postumo eodemque Scauro

¹ de Cor. § 11.

² i. 2.

³ This speech is lost: the existing speech in his defence is on the charge of extortion.

QUINTILIAN

- re^o repetundarum etiam exem^{pl}is, pro Cluentio (ut 70 modo ostendi) partitione. Non tamen haec, quia possunt bene aliquando fieri, passim facienda sunt, sed quotiens praeceptum vicerit ratio; quomodo et similitudine, dum brevi, et translatione atque aliis tropis (quae omnia cauti illi ac diligentes prohibent)
utemur interim, nisi cui divina illa pro Ligario ironia, 71 de qua paulo ante dixeram, displicet. Alia exordiorum vitia verius tradiderunt. Quod in plures causas accommodari potest, vulgare dicitur; id minus favorabile aliquando tamen non inutiliter adsumimus, magnis saepe oratoribus non evitatum. Quo et adversarius uti potest, commune appellatur; quod adversarius in suam utilitatem deflectere potest, com-mutabile; quod causae non cohaeret, separatum;
quod aliunde trahitur, tralatum; praeterea quod
longum, quod contra praecepta est; quorum pleraque
non principii modo sunt vitia sed totius orationis.
- 72 Haec de prooemio, quotiens erit eius usus, non semper autem est; nam et supervacuum aliquando
est, si sit praeparatus satis etiam sine hoc iudex, aut

QUINTILIAN

- si res praeparatione non egeat. Aristoteles quidem in totum id necessarium apud bonos iudices negat. Aliquando tamen uti nec si vélimus eo licet, cum iudex occupatus, cum angusta sunt tempora, cum
- 73 maior potestas ab ipsa re cogit incipere. Contraque est interim prooemii vis etiam non exordio. Nam iudices et in narratione nonnunquam et in argumentis ut attendant et ut faveant rogamus, quo Prodicus velut dormitantes eos excitari putabat, quale
- 74 est: Tum C. Varenus, is qui a familia Anchariana occisus est—hoc, quaeso, iudices, diligenter attendite. Utique si multiplex causa est, sua quibusque partibus danda praefatio est, ut Audite nunc reliqua, et Transeo nunc
- 75 illuc. Sed in ipsis etiam probationibus multa funguntur prooemii vice, ut facit Cicero pro Cluentio dicturus contra censores, pro Murena, cum se Servio excusat. Verum id frequentius est, quam ut exemplis confirmandum sit.
- 76 Quotiens autem prooemio fuerimus usi, tum sive ad expositionem transibimus sive pròtinus ad probationem, id debébit in principio postremum esse, cui commodissime iungi initium sequentium poterit.
- 77 Illa vero frigida et puerilis est in scholis adfectatio,

¹ Rhet. iii. 14.

² xlii. 117.

³ Cic. pro Var. fr. 8.

⁴ iii. 7.

QUINTILIAN

ut ipse transitus efficiat aliquam utique sententiam et huius velut praestigiae plausum petat, ut Ovidius lascivire in Metamorphosesin solet, quem tamen excusare necessitas potest res diversissimas in speciem 78 unius corporis colligentem. Oratori vero quid est necesse surripere hanc transgressionem et iudicem fallere, qui, ut ordini rerum animum intendat, etiam commonendus est? Peribit enim prima pars exposi-
79 tionis, si iudex narrari nondum sciet. Quapropter, ut non abrupte cadere in narrationem, ita non obscure transcendere est optimum. Si vero longior sequetur ac perplexa magis expositio, ad eam ipsam praeparandus erit iudex, ut Cicero saepius, sed et hoc loco fecit: Paulo longius exordium rei demonstrandae repetam, quod, quaeso, iudices, ne moleste patiamini; principiis enim cognitis multo facilius extrema intelligetis. Haec fere sunt mihi de exordio comperta.

II. Maxime naturale est et fieri frequentissime debet, ut praeparato per haec, quae supra dicta sunt, iudice res, de qua pronuntiaturus est, indicetur.
2 Haec est narratio. In qua sciens transcurram subtiles nimium divisiones quorundam plura eius genera

¹ pro Cluent. iv. 11.

QUINTILIAN

facientium. Non enim solam volunt esse illam negotii, de quo apud iudices quaeritur, expositionem, sed personae, ut M. Lollius Palicanus, humili loco Picens, loquax magis quam facundus; loci, ut Oppidum est in Hellesponto Lampsacum, iudices; temporis ut

Vere novo, gelidus canis cum montibus humor Liquitur;

causarum, quibus historici frequentissime utuntur, cum exponunt, unde bellum, seditio, pestilentia.

- 3 Praeter haec alias perfectas, alias imperfectas vocant; quod quis ignorat? Adiiciunt expositionem et praeteritorum esse temporum, quae est frequentissima, et praesentium, qualis est Ciceronis de discursu amicorum Chrysogoni, postquam est nominatus, et futurorum, quae solis dari vaticinantibus potest;
- 4 nam ὑποτύπωσις non est habenda narratio. Sed nos potioribus vacemus.

Plerique semper narrandum putaverunt, quod falsum esse pluribus coarguitur. Sunt enim ante omnia quaedam tam breves causae, ut propositionem

5 potius habeant quam narrationem. Id accidit aliquando utrique parti, cum vel nulla expositio est,

¹ Sall. Hist. iv. 25.

³ Verg. G. i. 43.

² Cic. Verr. i. xxiv. 63.

⁴ pro Rosc. Am. xxii. 60.

QUINTILIAN

vel de re constat, de iure quaeritur, ut apud centumviro, filius an frater debeat esse intestatae heres, pubertas annis an corporis habitu aestimetur: aut
cum est quidem in re narrationi locus, sed aut ante iudici nota sunt omnia aut priore loco recte exposita.

- 6 Accidit aliquando alteri et saepius ab actore, vel
quia satis est proponere vel quia sic magis expedit.
Satis est dixisse, *Certam creditam pecuniam peto ex
stipulatione; Legatum peto ex testamento.* Diversae
7 partis expositio est, cur ea non debeantur. Et satis est actori et magis expedit sic indicare: Dico ab Horatio sororem suam interfectam. Namque et propositione iudex crimen omne cognoscit, et ordo et 8 causa facti pro adversario magis est. Reus contra tunc narrationem subtrahet, cum id, quod obiicitur, neque negari neque excusari poterit, sed in sola iuris quaestione consistet; ut in eo, qui, cum pecuniam privatam ex aede sacra surripuerit, sacrilegii reus est, confessio verecundior quam expositio: Non negamus

QUINTILIAN

de templo pecuniam esse sublatam, calumniatur tamen accusator actione sacrilegii, cum privata fuerit non sacra; vos autem de hoc cognoscetis, an sacrilegium sit admissum.

- 9 Sed ut has aliquando non narrandi causas puto, sic ab illis dissentio, qui non existimant esse narrationem, cum reus quod obiicitur tantum negat; in qua est opinione Cornelius Celsus, qui condicionis huius esse arbitratur plerasque caedis causas et omnes ambitus
- 10 ac repetundarum. Non enim putat esse narrationem, nisi quae summam criminis de quo iudicium est contineat, deinde fatetur ipse pro Rabirio Postumo narrasse Ciceronem; atque ille et negavit pervenisse ad Rabirium pecuniam, qua de re erat quaestio constituta, et in hac narratione nihil de crimine ex-
- 11 posuit. Ego autem magnos alioqui secutus auctores, duas esse in iudiciis narrationum species existimo, alteram ipsius causae, alteram rerum ad causam
- 12 pertinentium expositionem. Non occidi hominem, nulla narratio est; convenit; sed erit aliqua et interim etiam longa contra argumenta eius criminis de anteaacta vita, de causis, propter quas innocens in periculum deducatur, aliis, quibus incredibile id quod
- 13 obiicitur fiat. Neque enim accusator tantum hoc dicit, occidisti; sed, quibus id probet narrat. Ut in tragoediis, cum Teucer Ulixen reum facit Aiace occisi dicens inventum eum in solitudine iuxta exanime corpus inimici cum gladio cruento, non id

QUINTILIAN

 modo Ulixes respondet non esse a se id facinus admissum, sed sibi nullas cum Aiace inimicitias fuisse, de laude inter ipsos certatum; deinde subiungit, quomodo in eam solitudinem venerit, iacentem exanimem sit conspicatus, gladium e vulnere ex-14 traxerit. His subtexitur argumentatio. Sed ne illud quidem sine narratione est, dicente accusatore, Fuisti in eo loco, in quo tuus inimicus occisus est; Non fui; dicendum enim, ubi fuerit. Quare ambitus quoque causae et repetundarum hoc etiam plures huiusmodi narrationes habere poterunt, quo plura crimina; in quibus ipsa quidem neganda sunt, sed
 argumentis expositione contraria resistendum est 15 interdum singulis interdum universis. An reus ambitus male narrabit, quos parentes habuerit, que-madmodum ipse vixerit, quibus meritis fretus ad peti-tionem descenderit? Aut qui repetundarum crimine insimulabitur, non et anteactam vitam, et quibus de causis provinciam universam vel accusatorem aut 16 testem offenderit, non inutiliter exponet? Quae si narratio non est, ne illa quidem Ciceronis pro Cluentio prima, cuius est initium: A. Cluentius Habitus. Nihil

QUINTILIAN

- enim hic de veneficio, sed de causis, quibus ei mater
 17 inimica sit, dicit. Illae quoque sunt pertinentes ad causam sed non ipsius causae narrationes : vel exempli gratia ut in Verrem de L. Domitio, qui pastorem, quod is aprum, quem ipsi muneri obtulerat, exceptum
 esse a se venabulo confessus esset, in crucem sustulit ;
 18 vel discutiendi alicuius extrinsecus criminis, ut pro
 Rabirio Postumo : Nam ut ventum Alexandriam est, iudices, haec una ratio a rege proposita Postumo est
servandae pecuniae, si curationem et quasi dispensationem regiam suscepisset ; vel augendi, ut describitur iter Verris.
- 19 Ficta interim narratio introduci solet, vel ad
 concitandos iudices ut pro Roscio circa Chrysogonum, cuius paulo ante habui mentionem ; vel ad resolendos aliqua urbanitate, ut pro Cluentio circa fratres Caepasios ; interdum per digressionem decoris gratia, qualis rursus in Verrem de Proserpina, In his quondam
locis mater filiam quaesisse dicitur. Quae omnia eo pertinent, ut appareat non utique non narrare eum qui negat, sed illud ipsum narrare quod negat.

¹ v. 3. The shepherd was crucified because the carrying of arms was forbidden.

² x. 28. The charge in question was that Rabirius had worn the Greek pallium instead of the Roman toga. But as an official of the king he was forced to wear Greek dress.

³ Verr. v. 10.

⁴ xxii. 60.

⁵ xx. 57 sqq.

⁶ iv. 48. The words quoted do not occur in our MSS. of Cicero.

QUINTILIAN

- 20 Ne hoc quidem simpliciter accipiendum, quod est a me positum, esse supervacuum narrationem rei, quam iudex noverit; quod sic intelligi volo, si non modo quid factum sit sciet, sed ita factum etiam, ut
- 21 nobis expedit, opinabitur. Neque enim narratio in hoc reperta est, ut tantum cognoscat iudex, sed aliquanto magis, ut consentiat. Quare, etiamsi non erit docendus, sed aliquo modo adficiendus, narrabimus cum praeparatione quadam: scire quidem eum in summam, quid acti sit, tamen rationem quoque facti cuiusque cognoscere ne gravetur.
- 22 Interim propter aliquem in consilium adhibitum nos repetere illa simulemus, interim, ut rei, quae ex adverso proponatur, iniquitatem omnes etiam circumstantes intelligant. In quo genere plurimis figuris erit varianda expositio ad effugiendum taedium nota audientis, sicut Meministi, et Fortasse supervacuum fuerit hic commorari. Sed quid ego diutius, cum tu optime
- 23 noris? Illud quale sit, tu scias, et his similia. Alioqui si apud iudicem, cui nota causa est, narratio semper videtur supervacua, potest videri non semper esse etiam ipsa actio necessaria.
- 24 Alterum est, de quo frequentius quaeritur, an sit utique narratio prooemio subiicienda; quod qui

¹ i.e. introduced to fill the place of a juror who had had to leave the jury.

QUINTILIAN

opinantur, non possunt videri nulla ratione ducti. Nam cum prooemium idcirco comparatum sit, ut iudex ad rem accipiendam fiat conciliatior, docilior, intentior, et probatio nisi causa prius cognita non possit adhiberi, protinus iudex notitia rerum instruendus videtur. Sed hoc quoque interim mutat condicio 25 causarum; nisi forte M. Tullius in oratione pulcherrima, quam pro Milone scriptam reliquit, male distulisse narrationem videtur tribus praepositis quaestionibus; aut profuisset exponere, quomodo insidias Miloni fecisset Clodius, si reum, qui a se hominem occisum fateretur, defendi omnino fas non fuisset, aut si iam praeiudicio senatus damnatus esset Milo, aut si Cn. Pompeius, qui praeter aliam gratiam iudicium etiam militibus armatis clauserat, tanquam
26 adversus ei timeretur. Ergo hae quoque quaestiones vim prooemii obtinebant, cum omnes iudicem praepararent. Sed pro Vareno quoque postea narravit^u quam obiecta diluit. Quod fiet utiliter, quotiens non repellendum tantum erit crimen, sed etiam transferendum, ut his prius defensis velut initium sit alium culpandi narratio, ut in armorum ratione

QUINTILIAN

antiquior cavendi quam ictum inferendi cura est.

- 27 Erunt quaedam causae (neque id raro) crimine quidem, de quo cognitio est, faciles ad diluendum sed multis anteactae vitae flagitiis et gravibus oneratae; quae prius amovenda sunt, ut propitius iudex defensionem ipsius negotii, cuius propria quaestio est, audiat: ut, si defendendus sit M. Caelius, nonne optime patronus occurrat prius conviciis luxuriae, petulantiae, impudicitiae quam veneficii, in quibus solis omnis Ciceronis versatur oratio; tum deinde narret de bonis Pallae totamque de vi explicet causam, quae est ipsius actione defensa?
- 28 Sed nos ducit scholarum consuetudo, in quibus certa quaedam ponuntur, quae themata dicimus, praeter quae nihil est diluendum, ideoque prooemio narratio semper subiungitur. Inde libertas declamatoribus, ut etiam secundo partis suae loco narrare videantur.
- 29 Nam cum pro petitore dicunt et expositione, tanquam priores agant, uti solent et contradictione, tanquam respondeant, idque fit recte. Nam cum sit declamatio forensium actionum meditatio, cur non in

QUINTILIAN

- utrumque protinus locum se exerceat? Cuius rationis
ignari ex more, cui adsueverunt, nihil in foro putant 30 esse mutandum. Sed in scholasticis quoque nonnun-quam evenit, ut pro narratione sit propositio. Nam quid exponet, quae zelotypum malae tractationis accusat, aut qui Cynicum apud censores reum de moribus facit? cum totum crimen uno verbo in qua-libet actionis parte posito satis indicetur. Sed haec hactenus.
- 31 Nunc, quae sit narrandi ratio, subiungam. Narratio
est rei factae aut ut factae utilis ad persuadendum expositio, vel (ut Apollodorus finit) oratio docens auditorem, quid in controversia sit. Eam plerique scriptores, maxime qui sunt ab Isócratē, volunt esse lucidam, brevem, verisimilem. Neque enim refert, an pro lucida perspicuam, pro verisimili probabilem 32 credibilemve dicamus. Eadem nobis placet divisio;
quanquam et Aristoteles ab Isocrate parte in una dissenserit praeceptum brevitatis irridens, tanquam necesse sit longam esse aut brevem expositionem nec liceat ire per medium, Theodori quoque
solam relinquunt ultimam partem, quia nec breviter 33 utique nec dilucide semper sit utile exponere. Quo

¹ See note prefixed to Index.

² See Index, s.v. Cynicus.

³ Rhet. iii. 16.

QUINTILIAN

diligentius distinguenda sunt singula, ut quid quoque loco prosit ostendam.

Narratio est aut tota pro nobis aut tota pro adversariis aut mixta ex utrisque. Si erit tota pro nobis, contenti sumus his tribus partibus per quas efficitur, quo facilius iudex intelligat, meminerit, 34 credat. Nec quisquam reprehensione dignum putet, quod proposuerim eam, quae sit tota pro nobis, debere esse verisimilem, cum vera sit. Sunt enim plurima vera quidem, sed parum credibilia, sicut falsa quoque frequenter verisimilia. Quare non minus laborandum est, ut iudex, quae vere dicimus quam quae fingimus, 5 credat. Sunt quidem hae, quas supra retuli, virtutes aliarum quoque partium. Nam et per totam actionem vitanda est obscuritas et modus ubique custodiendus, et credibilia esse omnia oportet quae dicuntur. Maxime tamen haec in ea parte custodienda sunt, quae prima iudicem docet; in qua si acciderit, ut aut non intelligat aut non meminerit aut non credat, frustra in reliquis laborabimus.

36 Erit autem narratio aperta atque dilucida, si fuerit primum exposita verbis propriis et significantibus et non sordidis quidem, non tamen exquisitis et ab usu
68

QUINTILIAN

remotis, tum distincta rebus, personis, temporibus, locis, causis, ipsa etiam pronuntiatione in hoc accommodata, ut iudex quae dicentur quam facillime 37 accipiat. Quae quidem virtus negligitur a plurimis, qui ad clamorem dispositae vel etiam forte circumfusae multitudinis compositi non ferunt illud intentionis silentium nec sibi deserti videntur, nisi omnia tumultu et vociferatione concusserint; rem indicare sermonis cotidiani et in quemcunque etiam indoctorum cadentis existimant, cum interim, quod tanquam facile contemnunt, nescias, praestare minus 38 velint an possint. Neque enim aliud in eloquentia, cuncta experti, difficilius reperient quam id, quod se fuisse dicturos omnes putant, postquam audierunt, quia non bona iudicant esse illa, sed vera. Tum autem optime dicit orator, cum videtur vera dicere.
39 At nunc, velut campum nacti expositionis, hic potissimum et vocem flectunt et cervicem reponunt et brachium in latus iactant totoque et rerum et verborum et compositionis genere lasciviunt; deinde, quod sit monstro simile, placet actio, causa non intelligitur. Verum haec omittamus, ne minus gratiae praecipiendo recta quam offensae reprehendendo prava mereamur.

- 40 Brevis erit narratio ante omnia, si inde coeperimus rem exponere, unde ad iudicem pertinet; deinde, si nihil extra causam dixerimus; tum etiam, si reciderimus omnia, quibus sublatis neque cognitioni quidquam neque utilitati detrahatur. Solet enim quaedam esse partium brevitās, quae longam tamen efficit summam. In portum veni, navem propexi, quanti veheret interrogavi, de pretio convenit, conscendi, sublatae sunt anchorae, solvimus oram, profecti sumus. Nihil horum dici celerius potest, sed sufficit dicere e portu navigavi. Et quotiens exitus rei satis ostendit priora, debemus hoc esse contenti, quo reliqua intelliguntur.
- 42 Quare, cum dicere liceat, Est mihi filius iuvenis, omnia illa supervacua: Cupidus ego liberorum uxorem duxi, natum filium sustuli, educavi, in adolescentiam perduxi. Ideoque Graecorum aliqui aliud circumcisam expositionem, id est σύντομον, aliud brevem putaverunt, quod illa supervacuis careret, haec posset aliquid ex
- 43 necessariis desiderare. Nos autem brevitatem in hoc ponimus, non ut minus, sed ne plus dicatur quam oporteat. Nam iterationes quidem et ταυτολογίας et περισσολογίας, quas in narratione vitandas quidam scriptores artium tradiderunt, transeo; sunt enim

QUINTILIAN

haec vitia non tantum brevitatis gratia refugienda.
44 Non minus autem cavenda erit, quae nimium corripientes omnia sequitur, obscuritas, satiusque est aliquid narrationi superesse quam deesse. Nam supervacua cum taedio dicuntur, necessaria cum 45 periculo subtrahuntur. Quare vitanda est etiam illa Sallustiana, quanquam in ipso virtutis obtinet locum, brevitas et abruptum sermonis genus, quod otiosum
fortasse lectorem minus fallat, audientem transvolat
nec dum repetatur expectat, cum praesertim lector non fere sit nisi eruditus, iudicem rura plerumque in decurias mittant de eo pronuntiaturum quod intellexerit; ut fortasse ubicunque, in narratione tamen praecipue, media haec tenenda sit via dicendi quan-46 tum opus est et quantum satis est. Quantum opus est autem non ita solum accipi volo, quantum ad indican-dum sufficit, quia non inornata debet esse brevitatis, alioqui sit indocta; nam et fallit voluptas et minus
longa quae delectant videntur, ut amoenum ac molle
iter, etiamsi est spatii amplioris, minus fatigat quam 47 durum aridumque compendium. Neque mihi unquam tanta fuerit cura brevitatis, ut non ea, quae credibilem faciunt expositionem, inseri velim. Simplex enim et undique praecisa non tam narratio vocari potest quam confessio. Sunt porro multae condicione ipsa

QUINTILIAN

rei longae narrationes, quibus extrema (ut praecepi)
prooemii parte ad intentionem praeparandus est
iudex; deinde curandum, ut omni arte vel ex spatio 48 eius detrahamus aliquid vel ex taedio. Ut minus longa sit, efficiemus quae poterimus differendo, non tamen sine mentione eorum, quae differemus: Quas causas occidendi habuerit, quos adsumpserit conscios, quemadmodum disposuerit insidias, probationis loco 49 dicam. Quaedam vero ex ordine praetermittenda, quale est apud Ciceronem: Moritur Fulcinius; multa enim, quae sunt in re, quia remota sunt a causa, prae-termittam. Et partitio taedium levat: *Dicam quae
acta sint ante ipsum rei contractum, dicam quae in re*
50 ipsa, dicam quae postea. Ita tres potius modicae narrationes videbuntur quam una longa. Interim expediet expositiones brevi interfatione distinguere:
Audistis quae ante acta sunt, accipite nunc quae insequuntur. Reficietur enim iudex priorum fine et se 51 velut ad novum rursus initium praeparabit. Si tamen adhibitis quoque his artibus in longum exierit ordo rerum, erit non inutilis in extrema parte commonitio;

¹ pro Caec. iv. 11.

QUINTILIAN

quod Cicero etiam in brevi narratione fecit: Adhuc, Caesar, Q. Ligarius omni culpa caret; domo est egressus non modo nullum ad bellum sed ne ad minimum quidem belli suspicionem et cetera.

- 52 Credibilis autem erit narratio ante omnia, si prius consuluerimus nostrum animum, ne quid naturae dicamus adversum, deinde si causas ac rationes factis praeposuerimus, non omnibus sed de quibus quaeritur, si personas convenientes iis, quae facta credi volumus, constituerimus, ut furti reum cupidum, adulterii libidinosum, homicidii temerarium, vel his contraria, si defendemus; praeterea loca, tempora
- 53 et similia. Est autem quidam et ductus rei credibilis, qualis in comoediis etiam et in mimis. Aliqua enim naturaliter sequuntur et cohaerent ut, si priora bene narraveris, iudex ipse quod postea sis narraturus
- 54 expectet. Ne illud quidem fuerit inutile, semina quaedam probationum spargere, verum sic ut narrationem esse meminerimus non probationem. Nonnunquam tamen etiam argumento aliquo confirmabimus, quod proposuerimus, sed simplici et brevi, ut in beneficiis: Sanus bibit, statim concidit, livor ac tu-
- 55 mor confestim est insecutus. Hoc faciunt et illae prae-

¹ pro Lig. ii. 4.

QUINTILIAN

parationes, cum reus dicitur robustus, armatus contra infirmos, inermes, securos. Omnia denique, quae probatione tractaturi sumus, personam, causam, locum, tempus, instrumentum, occasionem, narratione 56 delibabimus. Aliquando, si destituti fuēsimus his, etiam fatebimur vix esse credibile, sed verum et hoc maius habendum scelus; nescire nos quomodo factum
 57 sit aut quare, mirari sed probaturos. Optimae vero praeparationes erunt quae latuerint, ut a Cicerone sunt quidem utilissime praedicta omnia, per quae Miloni Clodius non Clodio Milo insidiatus esse videatur; plurimum tamen facit illa callidissima simplicitatis imitatio: Milo autem, cum in senatu fuisset eo die, quoad senatus est dimissus, domum venit, calceos et vestimenta mutavit, paulisper, dum se uxor, ut fit, comparat, 58 commoratus est. Quam nihil festinato, nihil praeparato fecisse videtur Milo! Quod non solum rebus ipsis vir eloquentissimus, quibus moras et lentum profectionis ordinem ducit, sed verbis etiam vulgaribus et cotidianis et arte occulta consecutus est; quae si aliter dicta essent, strepitu ipso iudicem ad custo-59 diendum patronum excitassent. Frigere videntur ista plerisque, sed hoc ipso manifestum est, quomodo iudi-

¹ pro Mil. x. 28.

QUINTILIAN

cem fefellerit, quod vix a lectore deprehenditur. Haec 60 sunt quae credibilem faciant expositionem. Nam id quidem, ne qua contraria aut sibi repugnantia in narratione dicamus, si cui praecipiendum est, is reliqua frustra docetur, etiamsi quidam scriptores artium hoc quoque tanquam occultum et a se prudenter erutum tradunt.

61 His tribus narrandi virtutibus adiiciunt quidam magnificentiam, quam μεγαλοπρέπειαν vocant, quae neque in omnes causas cadit (nam quid in plerisque iudiciis privatis, de certa credita, locato et conducto, interdictis habere loci potest supra modum se tollens oratio?) neque semper est utilis, velut proximo 62 exemplo Miloniano patet. Et meminerimus multas esse causas, in quibus confitendum, excusandum, summittendum sit quod exponimus; quibus omnibus aliena est illa magnificentiae virtus. Quare non magis proprium narrationis est magnifice dicere
quam miserabiliter, invidiose, graviter, dulciter, urbane; quae, cum suo quoque loco sint laudabilia,
non sunt huic parti proprie adsignata et velut dedita.

63 Illa quoque ut narrationi apta, ita ceteris quoque partibus communis est virtus, quam Theodectes huic
uni proprie dedit; non enim magnificam modo vult esse, verum etiam iucundam expositionem. Sunt

QUINTILIAN

- qui adiiciant his évidentiam, quae ἐνίργεια Graece 64 vocatur. Neque ego quemquam deceperim, ut dissimulem Ciceroni quoque plures partes placere.
Nam praeterquam planam et brevem et credibilem vult esse evidentem, moratam cum dignitate. Sed in oratione morata debent esse omnia cum dignitate, quae poterunt. Evidentia in narratione, quantum ego intelligo, est quidem magna virtus, cum quid veri non dicendum, sed quodammodo etiam osten-dendum est; sed subiici perspicuitati potest, quam quidam etiam contrariam interim putaverunt, quia
in quibusdam causis obscuranda veritas esset; quod 65 est ridiculum. Nam qui obscurare vult, narrat falsa pro veris, et in iis quae narrat debet laborare, ut videantur quam evidentissima.
- 66 Et quatenus etiam forte quadam pervenimus ad
difficilius narrationum genus, iam de iis loquamur,
in quibus res contra nos erit, quo loco nonnulli praetereundam narrationem putaverunt. Et sane nihil est facilius, nisi prorsus totam causam omnino non agere. Sed si aliqua iusta ratione huiusmodi susceperis litem, cuius artis est malam esse causam silentio confiteri? nisi forte tam hebes futurus est
iudex, ut secundum id pronuntiet, quod sciet narrare 67 te noluisse. Neque infitias eo in narratione, ut aliqua neganda, aliqua adiicienda, aliqua mutanda,

¹ Top. xxvi. 97.

QUINTILIAN

- sic aliqua etiam tacenda ; sed tacenda, quae tacere oportebit et liberum erit. Quod fit nonnunquam brevitatis quoque gratia, quale illud est, Respondit
 68 quae ei visum est. Distinguamus igitur genera
 • causarum. Namque in iis, in quibus non de culpa quaeretur sed de actione, etiamsi erunt contra nos themata, confiteri nobis licebit : Pecuniam de templo sustulit sed privatam, ideoque sacrilegus non est.
 69 Virginem rapuit, non tamen optio patri dabitur. In- genuum stupravit et stupratus se suspendit, non tamen ideo stuprator capite ut causa mortis punietur, sed decem milia, quae poena stupratori constituta est, dabit. Verum in his quoque confessionibus est aliquid, quod de invidia, quam expositio adversarii fecit, detrahi possit, cum etiam servi nostri de peccatis suis mol-70 lius loquantur. Quaedam enim quasi non narrantes mitigabimus : Non quidem, ut adversarius dicit, consilium furti in templum attulit nec diu captavit eius rei tempus ; sed occasione et absentia custodum corruptus et pecunia, quae nimium in animis hominum potest, victus est. Sed quid refert ? peccavit et fur est ; nihil attinet

¹ The victim can claim either that the ravisher should marry her or be put to death. Her father cannot however make either of these demands on her behalf.

QUINTILIAN

- 71 id defendere, cuius poenam non recusamus. Interim quasi damnemus ipsi: Vis te dicam vino impulsus? errore lapsus? nocte deceptus? vera sunt ista fortasse; tu tamen ingenuum stuprasti, solve decem milia. Nonnunquam praepositione praemuniri potest causa,
- 72 deinde exponi. Contraria sunt omnia tribus filiis, qui in mortem patris coniurarent: sortiti nocte singuli per ordinem cum ferro cubiculum intrarunt patre dormiente; cum occidere eum nemo potuisset,
- 73 excitato omnia indicarunt. Si tamen pater, qui divisit patrimonium et reos parricidii defendit, sic agat: Quod contra legem sufficit, parricidium obiicitur iuvenibus, quorum pater vivit atque etiam liberis suis adest. Ordinem rei narrare quid necesse est, cum ad legem nihil pertineat? sed si confessionem culpae meae exigitis, fui pater durus et patrimonii, quod iam melius
- 74 ab his administrari poterat, tenax custos; deinde subiiciat stimulos ab iis, quorum indulgentiores parentes erant, semper tamen habuisse eum animum, qui sit eventu deprehensus, ut occidere patrem non
- 88

QUINTILIAN

possent; neque enim iurejurando opus fuisse, si aliqui hoc mentis habuissent, nec sorte, nisi quod
 se quisque eximi voluerit, omnia haec qualiacunque placidioribus animis accipientur, illa brevi primae

75 propositionis defensione mollita.) At cum quaeritur an factum sit vel quale factum sit, licet omnia contra nos sint, quomodo tamen evitare expositionem salva causae ratione possumus? Narravit accusator neque ita ut, quae essent acta, tantum indicaret, sed adiecit invidiam, rem verbis exasperavit, accesserunt probationes, peroratio incendit et plenos irae reli-

76 quit. Expectat naturaliter iudex, quid narretur a nobis. Si nihil exponimus, illa esse quae adversarius dixit et talia qualia dixit credat necesse est.

Quid ergo? eadem exponemus? Si de qualitate agitur, cuius tum demum quaestio est, cum de re
 constat, eadem sed non eodem modo; alias causas,

77 aliam mentem, aliam rationem dabo. Verbis elevare quaedam licebit; luxuria liberalitatis, avaritia parsi-90

QUINTILIAN

moniae, negligentia simplicitatis nomine lenietur; vultu denique, voce, habitu vel favoris aliquid vel miserationis merebor. Solet nonnunquam movere lácrimas ipsa confessio. Atque ego libenter interrogem, sint illa defensuri, quae non narraverint, 78 necne? Nam si neque defenderint neque narraverint, tota causa prodetur; at si defensuri sunt, proponere certe plerumque id, quod confirmaturi sumus, oportet. Cur ergo non exponamus, quod et dilui potest et, ut hoc contingat, utique indicandum 79 est? Aut quid inter probationem et narrationem interest, nisi quod narratio est probationis continua propositio, rursus probatio narrationi congruens confirmatio? Videamus ergo, num haec expositio longior demum debeat esse et paulo verbosior praeparatione et quibusdam argumentis (argumentis dico, non argumentatione), cui tamen plurimum confert frequens adfirmatio effecturos nos quod dicimus; non posse vim rerum ostendi prima expositione; exspectent et opiniones suas differant et bene 80 sperent. Denique utique narrandum est, quidquid aliter quam adversarius exposuit narrari potest, aut etiam prooemia sunt in his causis supervacua; quae quid magis agunt, quam ut cognitioni rerum accommodatiorem iudicem faciant? Atque constabit, nusquam esse eorum maiorem usum, quam ubi animus iudicis ab aliqua contra nos insita opinione flectendus 81 est. Coniecturales autem causae, in quibus de facto quaeritur, non tam saepe rei, de qua iudicium est, quam eorum, per quae res colligenda est, expositionem habent. Quae cum accusator suspiciose narret, reus levare suspicionem debeat, aliter ab hoc 82 atque ab illo ad iudicem perferri oportet. At enim quaedam argumenta turba valent, diducta leviora sunt. Id quidem non eo pertinet, ut quaeratur an narrandum, sed quomodo narrandum sit. Nam et congerere plura in expositione quid prohibet, si id utile est causae, et promittere, sed et dividere narrationem et probationes subiungere partibus

QUINTILIAN

83 atque ita transire ad sequentia? Nam ne iis quidem accedo, qui semper eo putant ordine, quo quid actum sit, esse narrandum, sed eo malo narrare, quo expedit. Quod fieri plurimis figuris licet. Nam et aliquando nobis excidisse simulamus, cum quid

¹ For this technical term = cases turning on questions of fact, see III. vi. 30 sqq.

QUINTILIAN

utiliore loco reducimus, et interim nos reddituros reliquum ordinem testamur, quia sic futura sit causa
lucidior; interim re exposita subiungimus causas 84 quae antecesserunt. Neque enim est una lex defensionis certumque praescriptum; pro re, pro tempore intuenda quae prosint, atque ut erit vulnus, ita vel
curandum protinus vel, si curatio differri potest, 85 interim deligandum. Nec saepius narrare duxerim nefas, quod Cicero pro Cluentio fecit; estque non concessum modo, sed aliquando etiam necessarium, ut in causis repetundarum omnibusque quae simplices non sunt. Amentis est enim superstitione 86 praeceptorum contra rationem causae trahi. Narra-tionem ideo ante probationes ponere est institutum, ne iudex, qua de re quaeratur, ignoret. Cur igitur, si singula probanda aut refellenda erunt, non singula etiam narrentur? Me certe, quantacunque nostris experimentis habenda est fides, fecisse hoc in foro, quotiens ita desiderabat utilitas, probantibus et eruditis et iis, qui iudicabant, scio; et (quod non arroganter dixerim, quia sunt plurimi, quibuscum egi, qui me refellere possint, si mentiar) fere ponendae 87 a me causae officium exigebatur. Neque ideo tamen non id saepius facere oportebit, ut rerum ordinem sequamur. Quaedam vero etiam turpiter convertuntur, ut si peperisse narres, deinde concepisse; apertum testamentum, deinde signatum; in quibus si id, quod posterius est, dixeris, de priore tacere optimum; palam est enim praecessisse.

QUINTILIAN

- 88 Sunt quaedam et falsae expositiones, quarum in foro duplex genus est: alterum, quod instrumentis adiuvatur, ut P. Clodius fiducia testium, qua nocte incestum Romae commiserat, Interamnae se fuisse dicebat; alterum, quod est tuendum dicentis ingenio. Id interim ad solam verecundiam pertinet, unde etiam mihi videtur dici color, interim ad quae-
- 89 stionem. Sed utrumcunque erit, prima sit curarum, ut id quod fingemus fieri possit; deinde, ut et personae et loco et tempori congruat et credibilem rationem et ordinem habeat; si continget, etiam verae alicui rei colaereat aut argumento, quod sit in causa, confirmetur. Nam quae tota extra rem petita
- 90 sunt, mentiendi licentiam produnt. Curandum praecipue, (quod fingentibus frequenter exaudit) ne qua inter se pugnent; quaedam enim partibus blandiuntur, sed in summam non consentiunt; praeterea,

¹ color is a technical term for "the particular aspect given to a case by the skilful manipulation of the facts—the 'gloss' or 'varnish' put on them by the accused or accuser."—Peterson on Quint. x. i. 116.

QUINTILIAN

- ne iis, quae vera esse constabit, adversa sint; in schola etiam, ne color extra themata quaeratur.
- 91 Utrobique autem orator meminisse debebit actione tota, quid finxerit, quoniam solent excidere quae falsa sunt, verumque est illud, quod vulgo dicitur,
- 92 mendacem memorem esse oportere. Sciamus autem, si de nostro facto quaeratur, unum nobis aliquid esse dicendum; si de alieno, mittere in plura suspiciones licere. Est tamen quibusdam scholasticis contrariis, in quibus ponitur, aliquem non respondere, quod interrogatur, libertas omnia enumerandi, quae
- 93 responderi potuissent. Fingenda vero meminerimus ea, quae non cadant in testem. Sunt autem haec, quae a nostro dicuntur animo, cuius ipsi tantum conscii sumus; item quod a defunctis, nec hoc enim est qui neget; itemque ab eo cui idem expediet, is enim non negabit; ab adversario quoque, quia non
- 94 est habiturus in negando fidem. Somniorum et superstitionum colores ipsa iam facilitate auctoritatem perdiderunt. Non est autem satis in narratione uti coloribus, nisi per totam actionem consentiant, cum praesertim quorundam probatio sola
- 95 sit in adseveratione et perseverantia; ut ille parasitus, qui ter abdicatum a divite iuvenem et absolutum tanquam suum filium asserit, habebit quidem colorem, quo dicat et paupertatem sibi causam exponendi fuisse et ideo a se parasi personam esse susceptam, quia in illa domo filium haberet; et ideo illum ter innocentem abdicatum, quia filius abdicantis non esset. Nisi tamen in omnibus verbis et amorem patrium atque hunc quidem ardentissimum ostenderit et odium divitis et metum pro iuvene, quem periculose mansurum in illa domo, in qua tam invisus sit, sciat, suspicione subiecti petitoris non carebit.

QUINTILIAN

97 Evenit aliquando in scholasticis controversiis, quod in foro an possit accidere dubito, ut eodem colore utraque pars utatur, deinde eum pro se quaeque
98 defendat, ut in illa controversia: Uxor marito dixit, appellatam se de stupro a privigno et sibi constitutum tempus et locum; eadem contra filius detulit de noverca, edito tantum alio tempore ac loco; pater in eo, quem uxor praedixerat, filium invenit, in eo, quem filius, uxorem; illam repudiavit, qua tacente filium abdicat. Nihil dici potest pro iuvene, quod 99 non idem sit pro noverca. Ponentur tamen etiam communia; deinde ex personarum comparatione et indicii ordine et silentio repudiatae argumenta 100 ducentur. Ne illud quidem ignorare oportet, quaedam esse quae colorem non recipiant, sed tantum

 defendenda sint, qualis est ille dives, qui statuam pauperis inimici flagellis cecidit et reus est iniuriarum ;
 nam factum eius modestum esse nemo dixerit, fortasse
 ut sit tutum obtinebit.

101 Quodsi pars expositionis pro nobis, pars contra nos
 erit, miscenda sit an separanda narratio, cum ipsa condicione causae deliberandum est. Nam si plura sunt quae nocent, quae prosunt obruuntur. Itaque tunc dividere optimum erit, et iis, quae partem nostram adiuvant, expositis et confirmatis, adversus reliqua uti remediis, de quibus supra dictum est.

102 Si plura proderunt, etiam coniungere licebit, ut quae obstant in mediis velut auxiliis nostris posita minus habeant virium. Quae tamen non erunt nuda po-nenda, sed ut et nostra aliqua argumentatione firmemus et diversa cur credibilia non sint adiciamus ;
 quia, nisi distinguamus, verendum est, ne bona nostra permixtis malis inquinentur.

103 Illa quoque de narratione praecipi solent, ne qua

QUINTILIAN

- ex ea fiat excursio, ne avertatur a iudice sermo, ne alienae personae vocem demus, ne argumentemur; adiiciunt quidam etiam, ne utamur adfectibus; quorum pleraque sunt frequentissime custodienda,
- 104 immo nunquam, nisi ratio coegerit, mutanda. Ut sit expositio perspicua et brevis, nihil quidem tam raro poterit habere rationem quam excursio; nec unquam debebit esse nisi brevis et talis, ut vi quadam videamur adfectus velut recto itinere depulsi, qualis
- 105 est Ciceronis circa nuptias Sasiae: O mulieris scelus incredibile et praeter hanc, unam in omni vita, inauditum! O libidinem effrenatam et indomitam! O audaciam singularem! nonne limuisse, si minus vim deorum hominumque famam, at illam ipsam noctem, facesque illas nuptiales! non limen cubiduli! non cubile filiae! non parietes, denique ipsos, superiorum testes, nuptiarum!
- 106 Sermo vero, aversus, a iudice et brevius indicat, interim et coarguit magis, de qua re idem, quod in prooemio dixeram, sentio, sicut de prospopoeia quoque; qua tamen non Servius modo, Sulpicius utitur pro Aufidia: Somnone te languidum an gravi

¹ pro Clu. vi. 15.

QUINTILIAN

lethargo, pulem pressum? sed M. quoque Tullius, circa nauarchos, (nam ea quoque rei expositio est)
 107 Ut adeas, tantum dabis, et reliqua. Quid? pro Cluentio, Staieni Bulbique, colloquium, nonne ad celeritatem plurimum, et ad fidem confert? Quae ne fecisse inobservantia quadam videatur, quanquam hoc in illo, credibile non est, in Partitionibus praecepit, ut habeat narratio suavitatem, admirationes, exspectationes, exitus inopinatos, colloquia personarum, 108 omnes adfectus. Argumentabimur, ut dixi, nunquam; argumentum, ponemus aliquando; quod facit pro Ligario Cicero, cum dicit sic eum provinciae praefuisse, ut illi pacem, esse expediret. Inseremus expositioni et brevem, cum res poscet, defensionem 109 et rationem factorum. Neque enim, narrandum est tanquam testi, sed tanquam patrono. Rei ordo per se talis est: Q. Ligarius legatus, cum C. Considio profectus. Quid ergo M. Tullius? Q. enim, inquit, Ligarius, cum esset nulla belli suspicio, legatus in Africam, cum 110 C. Considio profectus est. Et alibi: Non modo ad bellum sed ne ad minimam quidem suspicionem belli.

¹ Verr. v. xlv. 118.

² pro Clu. xxvi.

³ ix. 31.

⁴ ii. 4. Ligarius was accused of having fought for the Pompeians in Africa. Cicero points out that he went out to Africa before the outbreak of war was dreamed of and that his whole attitude was discreet.

QUINTILIAN

Et cum esset indicaturo satis, Q. Ligarius, nullo se implicari negotio passus est, adiecit, domum spectans, ad suos redire cupiens. Ita quod exponebat, et ratione fecit, credibile et adfectu quoque implevit.

- 111 Quo magis miror eos, qui non putant utendum in narratione adfectibus. Qui si hoc dicunt, non diu neque ut in epilogo, mecum sentiunt; effugiendae sunt enim morae. Ceterum cur ego iudicem nolim, dum
- 112 eum doceo, etiam movere? Cur, quod in summa parte sum actionis petiturus, non in primo statim rerum ingressu, si fieri potest, consequar? cum praesertim etiam in probationibus, faciliorem sim animum eius habiturus occupatum vel ira vel misera-
- 113 tione. An non M. Tullius circa verbera civis Romani omnes brevissime movet adfectus, non solum conditione ipsius, loco iniuriae, genere verberum, sed animi quoque commendatione? Summum enim virum ostendit, qui, cum virgis caederetur, non ingemuerit, non rogaverit, sed tantum civem Romanum esse se cum invidia caedentis et fiducia iuris clama-
- 114 verit. Quid? Philodami casum nonne cum per totam expositionem incendit invidia, tum in sup-

¹ pro Lig. i. 3.

² Verr. v. 62. A Roman citizen might not be scourged.
cp. St. Paul.

³ ib. i. 30.

QUINTILIAN

plicio ipso lacrimis implevit, cum flentes non tam narraret quam ostenderet patrem de morte filii, filium 115 de patris? Quid ulli epilogi possunt magis habere miserabile? Serum est enim advocare iis rebus adfectum in peroratione, quas securus narraveris; adsuevit illis iudex iamque eas sine motu mentis accipit, quibus commotus novis non est, et difficile est mutare animi habitum semel constitutum.

X
 116 Ego vero (neque enim dissimulabo iudicium meum, quanquam id, quod sum dicturus, exemplis magis quam praeceptis ullis continetur) narrationem, ut si ullam partem orationis, omni qua potest gratia et venere exornandam puto. Sed plurimum refert,
 117 quae sit natura eius rei quam exponemus. In parvis ergo, quales sunt fere privatae, sit ille pressus et velut applicitus rei cultus, in verbis summa diligentia; quae in locis impetu feruntur et circumiectae orationis copia latent, hic expressa et, ut vult Zeno, sensu tincta esse debebunt; compositio dissimulata quidem
 118 sed tamen quam iucundissima; figurae non illae poeticae et contra rationem loquendi auctoritate veterum receptae (nam debet esse quam purissimus sermo), sed quae varietate taedium effugiant et 112

QUINTILIAN

mutationibus animum levent, ne in eundem casum, similem compositionem, pares elocutionum tractus incidamus. Caret enim ceteris lenociniis expositio et, nisi commendetur hac venustate, iaceat necesse 119 est. Nec in ulla parte intentior est iudex, eoque nihil recte dictum perit. Praeterea nescio quomodo etiam credit facilius, quae audienti iucunda sunt, et 120 voluptate ad fidem ducitur. Ubi vero maior res erit, et atrocia invidiose et tristia miserabiliter dicere licebit, non ut consumantur adfectus, sed ut tamen velut primis lineis designentur, ut plane, qualis futura
121 sit imago rei, statim appareat. Ne sententia quidem velut fatigatum intentione stomachum iudicis reficere dissuaserim, maxime quidem brevi interiectione, qualis est illa, Fecerunt servi Milonis, quod suos quisque servos in, tali re facere voluisset, interim paulo liberiore, qualis est illa, Nubit genero socrus, nullis auspiciis, 122 nullis auctoribus, funestis ominibus omnium. Quod cum sit factum iis quoque temporibus, quibus omnis ad utilitatem potius quam ad ostentationem componebatur oratio, et erant adhuc severiora iudicia, quanto

¹ pro Mil. x. 29.

² pro Clu. v. 14.

QUINTILIAN

- nunc faciendum magis, cum in ipsa capitis aut fortunarum pericula inrupit voluptas? cui hominum desiderio quantum dari debeat alio loco dicam. In-
- 123 terim aliquid indulgendum esse confiteor. Multum confert adiecta veris credibilis rerum imago, quae velut in rem praesentem perducere audientes videtur, qualis est illa M. Caelii in Antonium descriptio: Namque ipsum offendunt temulento sopore profligatum, totis praecordiis stertentem, ructuosos spiritus geminare, praeclarasque contubernales ab omnibus spondis trans-
- 124 versas incubare et reliquas circumiacere passim. Quae tamen exanimatae terrore, hostium adventu percepto, excitare Antonium conabantur, nomen inclamabant, frustra a cervicibus tollebant, blandius alia ad aurem invocabat, vehementius etiam nonnulla feriebat; quarum cum omnium vocem luctumque noscicaret, proximae cuiusque collum amplexu petebat, neque dormire excitatus neque vigilare ebrius poterat, sed semisomno sopore inter manus centurionum concubinarumque iactabatur. Nihil his neque credibilius fingi neque vehementius exprobrari neque manifestius ostendi potest.
- 125 Neque illud quidem praeteribo, quantam adferat fidem expositioni narrantis auctoritas, quam mereri debemus ante omnia quidem vita, sed et ipso

QUINTILIAN

genere orationis, quod quo fuerit gravius ac sanctius, hoc plus habeat necesse est in adfirmando 126 ponderis. Effugienda igitur in hac praecipue parte omnis calliditatis suspicio, neque enim se usquam custodit magis iudex; nihil videatur fictum, nihil sollicitum; omnia potius a causa quam ab oratore
 127 profecta credantur. At hoc pati non possumus et perire artem putamus, nisi appareat, cum desinat ars esse, si apparet. Pendemus ex laude atque hanc laboris nostri ducimus summam. Ita, quae circumstantibus ostentare volumus, iudicibus prodimus.

128 Est quaedam etiam repetita narratio, quae ἐπιδιήγησις dicitur, sane res declamatoria magis quam forensis, ideo autem reperta, ut, quia narratio brevis esse debet, fusius et ornatius res possit exponi; quod fit vel invidiae gratia vel miserationis. Id et raro faciendum iudico neque sic unquam, ut totus ordo repetatur; licet enim per partes idem consequi. Ceterum, qui uti ἐπιδιηγῆσαι volet, narrationis loco rem stringat et contentus indicare, quod factum sit, quo sit modo factum plenius se loco suo, expositurum esse promittat.

129 Initium narrationis quidam utique faciendum a

QUINTILIAN

persona putant, eamque, si nostra sit, ornandam, si aliena, infamandam statim. Hoc sane frequentis-130 simum est, quia personae sunt inter quas litigatur. Sed hae quoque interim cum suis accidentibus ponendae, cum id profuturum est: ut A. Cluentius Habitus fuit pater huiusce, iudices, homo non solum municipii Larinatis, ex quo erat, sed regionis illius et vicinitatis virtute, estimatione, nobilitate princeps; interim sine his ut Q. enim 131 Ligarius cum esset; frequenter vero et a re, sicut pro Tullio Cicero Fundum habet in agro Thurino M. Tullius patrum; Demosthenes pro Ctesiphonte Τοῦ γὰρ Φωκικοῦ συνστάτος πολέμου.

132 De fine narrationis cum iis contentio est, qui perduci expositionem volunt eo, unde quaestio oritur: His rebus ita gestis, P. Dolabella praetor interdixit, ut est consuetudo, de vi, hominibus armatis, sine ulla exceptione, tantum ut unde deiecisset restitueret; deinde resti-tuisse se dixit. Sponsio facta est; hac de sponsione vobis indicandum est. Id a petitore semper fieri potest, a defensore non semper.

III. Ordine ipso narrationem sequitur confirmatio.

¹ pro Cluent. v. 11.

² pro Lig. i. 2.

³ pro Tull. vi. 14.

⁴ § 18.

⁵ Cic. pro Caec. viii. 23.

QUINTILIAN

- Probanda sunt enim quae propter hoc exposuimus. Sed priusquam ingrediar hanc partem, pauca mihi de quorundam opinione dicenda sunt. Plerisque moris est prolato rerum ordine protinus utique in aliquem laetum ac plausibilem locum quam maxime
- 2 possint favorabiliter excurrere. Quod quidem natum ab ostentatione declamatoria iam in forum venit, postquam agere causas non ad utilitatem litigatorum, sed ad patronorum iactationem repertum est, ne, si pressae illi, qualis saepius desideratur, narrationis gracilitati coniuncta argumentorum pugnacitas fuerit, dilatis diutius dicendi voluptatibus oratio refrigescat.
- 3 In quo vitium illud est, quod sine discrimine causarum atque utilitatis hoc, tanquam semper expediat aut etiam necesse sit, faciunt, eoque sumptas ex iis partibus, quarum alius erat locus, sententias in hanc congerunt, ut plurima aut iterum dicenda sint aut, quia alieno loco dicta sunt, dici suo non possint.
- 4 Ego autem confiteor, hoc exspatiandi genus non modo narrationi sed etiam quaestionibus vel universis vel

QUINTILIAN

interim singulis opportune posse subiungi, cum res postulat aut certe permittit, atque eo vel maxime illustrari ornarique orationem, sed si cohaeret et sequitur, non si per vim cuneatur et quae natura
5 iuncta erant distrahit. Nihil enim tam est consequens quam narrationi probatio, nisi excursus ille vel quasi finis narrationis vel quasi initium probationis
est. Erit ergo illi nonnunquam locus, ut, si expositio circa finem atrox fuerit, prosequamur eam velut 6 erumpente protinus indignatione. Quod tamen ita fieri oportebit, si res dubitationem non habebit.
Alioqui prius est quod obiicias verum efficere quam magnum, quia criminum invidia pro reo est, priusquam probabitur; difficillima est enim gravissimi
7 cuiusque sceleris fides. Item fieri non inutiliter potest ut, si merita in adversarium aliqua exposueris,
in ingratum inveharis, aut, si varietatem criminum
narratione demonstraveris, quantum ob ea periculum
8 intentetur, ostendas. Verum haec breviter omnia.
Iudex enim ordine audito festinat ad probationem
et quam primum certus esse sententiae cupit.
Praeterea cavendum est, ne ipsa expositio

QUINTILIAN

vanescat, aversis in aliud animis et inani mora fatigatis.

- 9 Sed ut non semper est necessaria post narrationem illa procursio, ita frequenter utilis ante quaestionem praeparatio, utique si prima specie minus erit favorabilis, si legem asperam ac poenarias actiones tuebimur. Est hic locus velut sequentis exordii¹ ad conciliandum probationibus nostris iudicem, mitigandum, concitandum.²
- 10 Quod liberius hic et vehementius fieri potest, quia iudici nota iam causa est. His igitur velut fomentis, si quid erit asperum, praemolliemus, quo facilius aures iudicum quae post dicturi erimus admittant, ne ius nostrum oderint. Nihil enim facile
- 11 persuadetur invitis. Quo loco iudicis quoque noscenda natura est, iuri magis an aequo sit appositus; proinde enim magis aut minus erit hoc necessarium.

- Ceterum res eadem et post quaestionem perorationis vice fungitur. Hanc partem παρέκβασις vocant Graeci, Latini egressum vel egressionem. Sed hae sunt plures, ut dixi, quae per totam causam varios habent excursus, ut laus hominum locorumque, ut descriptio regionum, expositio quarundam rerum
- 13 gestarum, vel etiam fabulosarum. Quo ex genere est in orationibus contra Verrem compositis Siciliae laus,

¹ exordii, B: exordium, A and Victor.

² initigandum, concitandum omitted by B.

QUINTILIAN

Proserpinae raptus ; pro C. Cornelio popularis illa virtutum Cn. Pompei commemoratio, in quam ille divinus orator, velut nomine ipso ducis cursus dicendi teneretur, abrupto quem inchoaverat sermone devertit
 14 actutum. Παρέκβασις est, ut mea quidem fert opinio, alicuius rei, sed ad utilitatem causae pertinentis extra ordinem excurrentis tractatio. Quapropter non video cur hunc ei potissimum locum adsignent, qui rerum ordinem sequitur, non magis quam illud, cur hoc nomen ita demum proprium putent, si aliquid in digressu sit exponendum, cum tot modis a recto itinere
 15 declinet oratio. Nam quidquid dicitur praeter illas quinque quas fecimus partes, egressio est, indignatio, miseratio, invidia, convicium, excusatio, conciliatio, maledictorum refutatio. Similia his, quae non sunt in quaestione, omnis amplificatio, minutio, omne adfectus genus, et quae ¹ maxime iucundam et ornatam faciunt orationem, de luxuria, de avaritia, religione, officiis ; quae cum sint argumentis subiecta similium
 16 rerum, quia cohaerent, egredi non videntur. Sed plurima sunt, quae rebus nihil secum cohaerentibus inseruntur, quibus iudex reficitur, admonetur, placatur, rogatur, laudatur. Innumerabilia sunt haec, ¹ et quae, Spalding : atque ea, MSS.

¹ Verr. III. vii. 27. ² See note on IV. iv. 8.

QUINTILIAN

quorum alia sic praeparata adferimus, quaedam ex occasione vel necessitate ducimus, si quid nobis agentibus novi accidit, interpellatio, interventus alicuius, 17 tumultus. Unde Ciceroni quoque in prooemio, cum diceret pro Milone, digredi fuit necesse, ut ipsa oratiuncula qua usus est patet. Potest autem paulo longius exire, qui praeparat aliquid ante quaestionem et qui finitae probationi velut commendationem adiicit. At qui ex media erumpit, cito ad id redire debet unde devertit.

IV. Sunt qui narrationi propositionem subiungant tanquam partem iudicialis materiae, cui opinioni respondimus. Mihi autem propositio videtur omnis confirmationis initium, quod non modo in ostendenda quaestione principali, sed nonnunquam etiam in singulis argumentis poni solet maximeque in iis quae ἐπιχειρήματα vocantur. Sed nunc de priore loquimur.

2 Ea non semper uti necesse est. Aliquando enim sine propositione quoque satis manifestum est quid in quaestione versetur, utique si narratio ibi finem habet, ubi initium quaestio, adeo, ut aliquando subiungatur expositioni, quae solet in argumentis esse summa collectio: Haec, sicut exposui, ita gesta sunt, indices; in-

¹ The speech actually delivered, not the long speech which has come down to us, but was never delivered.

² III. ix. 5; xi. 27.

³ III. ix. 2.

⁴ See v. xiv. 14.

QUINTILIAN

- sidiator superatus est, vi victa vis vel potius oppressa vir-*
 3 tute audacia est. Nonnunquam vero valde est utilis, ubi res defendi non potest et de fine quaeritur, ut
 pro eo, qui pecuniam privatam de templo sustulit, Sacrilegii agitur, de sacrilegio cognoscitis, ut iudex in-telligat id unum esse officii sui, quaerere an id quod
 4 obiiicitur sacrilegium sit. Item in causis obscuris aut multiplicibus, nec semper propter hoc solum ut sit causa lucidior, sed aliquando etiam ut magis moveat.
 Movet autem, si protinus subtexantur aliqua, quae prosint. Lex aperte scripta est ut peregrinus qui murum ascenderit morte multetur; peregrinum te esse certum est; quin ascenderis murum, non quaeritur; quid superest, nisi ut te puniri oporteat? Haec enim propositio confessionem adversarii premit et quodammodo iudicandi moram tollit, nec indicat quaestionem sed adiuvat.
- 5 Sunt autem propositiones et simplices et duplices
 vel multiplices, quod accidit non uno modo. Nam et plura crimina iunguntur, ut cum Socrates accusatus
 est, quod corrumperet iuventutem et novas superstitiones introduceret; et singula ex pluribus colliguntur, ut cum legatio male gesta obiiicitur Aeschini, quod
 inentitus sit, quod nihil ex mandatis fecerit, quod

¹ pro Mil. xi. 30.

QUINTILIAN

6 moratus sit, quod munera acceperit. Recusatio quoque plures interim propositiones habet, ut contra petitionem pecuniae: Male petis, procuratorem enim tibi esse non licuit, sed neque illi, cuius nomine litigas, habere procuratorem; sed neque est heres eius, a quo
 7 accepisse mutuum dicor nec ipsi debui. Multiplicari haec in quantum libet possunt, sed rem ostendisse satis est. Hae si ponantur singulae subiectis probationibus, plures sunt propositiones; si coniungantur, in partitionem cadunt.

8 Est et nuda propositio, qualis fere in coniecturalibus, Caedis ago, furtum obiiicio; est ratione subiecta, ut Maiestatem minuit C. Cornelius; nam codicem tribunus plebis ipse pro contione legit. Praeter haec utimur propositione aut nostra, ut Adulterium obiiicio; aut adversarii, ut Adulterii mecum agitur, aut communi, ut Inter me et adversarium quaestio est, uter sit intestato propior. Nonnunquam diversas quoque iungimus: Ego hoc dico, adversarius hoc.

¹ The speech is lost. In 67 B.C. Cornelius as tribune of the plebs proposed a law enacting that no man should be released from the obligations of a law save by decree of the people. This struck at a privilege usurped by the senate, and Servilius Globulus, another tribune, forbade the herald to read out the proposal. Cornelius then read it himself. He was accused of maiestas, defended by Cicero in 65 B.C. and acquitted.

QUINTILIAN

- 9 Habet interim vim propositionis, etiamsi per se non est propositio, cum exposito rerum ordine subiicimus: De his cognoscetis, ut sit haec commonitio iudicis, quo se ad quaestionem acrius intendat et velut quodam tactu resuscitatus finem esse narrationis et initium probationis intelligat, et nobis confirmationem ingredientibus ipse quoque quodammodo novum audiendi sumat exordium.

V. Partitio est nostrarum aut adversarii propositionum aut utrarumque ordine collocata enumeratio. Hac quidam utendum semper putant, quod ea fiat causa lucidior et iudex attentior ac docilior, si scierit et de quo dicamus et de quo dicturi postea simus.

- 2 Rursus quidam periculosum id oratori arbitrantur duabus ex causis: quod nonnunquam et excidere soleant quae promissimus et, si qua in partiendo praeterimus, occurrere; quod quidem nemini accidet, nisi qui plane vel nullo fuerit ingenio vel ad agendum
3 nihil cogitati praemeditatique detulerit. Alioqui quae tam manifesta et lucida est ratio quam rectae partitionis? Sequitur enim naturam ducem adeo ut memoriae id maximum sit auxilium via dicendi non decedere. Quapropter ne illos quidem probaverim, qui partitionem vetant ultra tres propositiones extendere. Quae sine dubio, si nimium sit multiplex,

QUINTILIAN

fugiet memoriam iudicis et turbabit intentionem ; hoc tamen numero velut lege non est alliganda, cum 4 possit causa plures desiderare. Alia sunt magis, propter quae partitione non semper sit utendum :
primum, quia pleraque gratiora sunt, si inventa subito
nec domo adlata, sed inter dicendum ex re ipsa nata videantur, unde illa non iniucunda schemata, Paene excidit mihi, et Fugeral me, et Recte admones. . Propositis enim probationibus omnis in reliquum gratia no-5 vitatis praecerpitur. Interim vero etiam fallendus est iudex et variis artibus subeundus, ut aliud agi quam quod petimus putet. Nam est nonnunquam dura propositio, quod iudex si providit, non aliter praeformidat quam qui ferrum medici priusquam curetur aspexit ; at si re non ante proposita securum
ac nulla denuntiatione in se conversum intrarit oratio, 6 efficiet, quod promittenti non crederetur. Interim refugienda non modo distinctio quaestionum est, sed omnino tractatio ; adfectibus turbandus et ab intentione auferendus auditor. Non enim solum oratoris

QUINTILIAN

est docere, sed plus eloquentia circa movendum valet. Cui rei contraria est maxime tenuis illa et scrupulose in partes secta divisionis diligentia eo tempore quo
7 cognoscenti iudicium conamur auferre. Quid quod interim, quae per se levia sunt et infirma, turba valent? Ideoque congerenda sunt potius et velut eruptione pugnandum; quod tamen rarum esse debet et ex necessitate demum, cum hoc ipsum quod dissi-
8 nile rationi est coegerit ratio. Praeter haec in omni partitione est utique aliquid potentissimum, quod cum audit iudex cetera tanquam supervacua gravari solet. Itaque si plura vel obicienda sunt vel diluenda, et utilis et iucunda partitio est ut, quid quaque de re dicturi simus, ordine appareat; at si unum crimen
9 varie defendemus, supervacua. Ut si illa partiamur, Dicam non talem esse hunc quem tueor reum, ut in eo credibile videri possit homicidium; dicam occidendi causam huic non fuisse; dicam hunc eo tempore quo homo occisus est trans mare fuisse, omnia, quae ante id quod ultimum est exsequeris, inania videri necesse est.
10 Festinat enim iudex ad id quod potentissimum est, et velut obligatum promisso patronum, si est pa-
140

QUINTILIAN

- tientior, tacitus appellat; si vel occupatus vel in aliqua potestate vel etiam si moribus incompotitus, cum convicio efflagitat. Itaque non defuerunt, qui Ciceronis illam pro Cluentio partitionem improbarent, qua se dicturum esse promisit primum, neminem maioribus criminibus, gravioribus testibus, in iudicium vocatum quam Oppianicum; deinde praeiudicia esse facta ab ipsis iudicibus, a quibus condemnatus sit; postremo, iudicium pecunia temptatum non a Cluentio, sed contra Cluentium; quia, si probari posset, quod est tertium, nihil necesse fuerit dicere priora. Rursus nemo tam erit iniustus aut stultus, quin eum fateatur optime pro Murena esse partitum: Intelligo, iudices, tris totius accusationis fuisse partes, et earum unam in reprehensione vitae, alteram in contentione dignitatis, tertiam in criminibus ambitus esse versatam. Nam sic et ostendit lucidissime causam et nihil fecit altero super-vacuum.
- 13 De illo quoque genere defensionis plerique dubitant: Si occidi, recte feci; sed non occidi; quo enim prius pertinere, si sequens firmum sit? haec invicem obstare, et utroque utentibus in neutro haberi fidem. Quod sane in parte verum est, et illo sequenti, si

¹ iv. 9. Oppianicus had been indicted by Cluentius for an attempt upon his life and condemned. The "previous judgments" referred to were condemnations of his accomplices, which made Oppianicus' condemnation inevitable. Oppianicus was condemned, and it was alleged that this was due to bribery by Cluentius. Cluentius was now on his trial for the alleged murder of various persons.

QUINTILIAN

- 14 modo indubitabile est, sit solo utendum. At si quid in eo, quod est fortius, timebimus, utraque probatione nitemur. Alius enim alio moveri solet, et qui factum putavit, iustum credere potest; qui tanquam iusto non movebitur, factum fortasse non credet. Ut certa manus uno telo possit esse contenta, incerta
- 15 plura spargenda sunt, ut sit et fortunae locus. Egregie vero Cicero pro Milone insidiatorem primum Clodium ostendit, tum addidit ex abundanti, etiamsi id non fuisset, talem tamen civem cum summa virtute inter-
- 16 fectoris et gloria necari potuisse. Neque illum tamen ordinem, de quo prius dixi, damnaverim; quia quaedam, etiamsi ipsa sunt dura, in id tamen valent, ut ea molliant quae sequuntur. Nec omnino sine ratione est quod vulgo dicitur: Iniquum petendum, ut aequum
- 17 feras. Quod tamen nemo sic accipiat ut omnia credat audenda. Recte enim Graeci praecipunt, Non temptanda, quae effici omnino non possint. Sed quotiens hac, de qua loquor, duplici defensione utemur, id laborandum est, ut in illam partem sequentem fides ex priore ducatur. Potest enim videri, qui tuto etiam confessurus fuit, mentiendi causam in negando non habere.

¹ § 13.

² The proverb would seem originally to refer to bargaining in the market: the salesman, knowing he will be beaten down, sets his original price too high. But it would equally apply to claims for damages in the courts.

- 18 Et illud utique faciendum est, ut, quotiens suspicabimur a iudice aliam probationem desiderari • quam de qua loquimur, promittamus nos plene et statim de eo satis esse facturos, praecipueque si de 19 pudore agetur. Frequenter autem accidit, ut causa parum verecunda iure tuta sit; de quo ne inviti iudices audiant et aversi, frequentius sunt admonendi, secuturam defensionem probitatis et dignitatis; ex-20 spectent paulum et agi ordine sinant. Quaedam interim nos invitis litigatoribus simulandum est dicere, quod Cicero pro Cluentio facit circa iudicia-riam legem; nonnunquam, quasi interpellemur ab
iis, subsistere; saepe convertenda ad ipsos oratio;
hortandi ut sinant nos uti nostro consilio. Ita surrepetur animo iudicis et, dum sperat probationem 21 pudoris, asperioribus illis minus repugnabit. Quae cum receperit, etiam verecundiae defensionem faciliorem erit. Sic utraque res invicem iuvabit, eritque iudex circa ius nostrum spe modestiae attentior, circa modestiam iuris probatione proclivior.
- 22 Sed ut non semper necessaria aut utilis est partitio,¹ ita opportune adhibita plurimum orationi

¹ utilis est partitio, Victor: utilis etiam partitio est, A:
etiam supervacua partitio est, B.

QUINTILIAN

- lucis et gratiae confert. Neque enim solum id efficit, ut clariora fiant, quae dicuntur, rebus velut ex turba extractis et in conspectu iudicum positis; sed reficit quoque audientem certo singularum partium fine, non aliter quam facientibus iter multum detrahunt fatigationis notata inscriptis lapidibus spatia.
- 23 Nam et exhausti laboris nosse mensuram voluptati est, et hortatur ad reliqua fortius exsequenda scire quantum supersit. Nihil enim longum videri necesse
- 24 est, in quo, quid ultimum sit, certum est. Nec immerito multum ex diligentia partiendi tulit laudis Q. Hortensius, cuius tamen divisionem in digitos diductam nonnunquam Cicero leviter eludit. Nam est suus et in gestu modus, et vitanda, utique maxime, concisa nimium et velut articulosa partitio.
- 25 Nam et auctoritati plurimum detrahunt minuta illa nec iam membra sed frusta, et huius gloriae cupidi, quo subtilius et copiosius divisisse videantur, et super-vacua adsumunt et quae natura singularia sunt secant, nec tam plura faciunt quam minora; deinde cum fecerunt mille particulas, in eandem incidunt obscuritatem, contra quam partitio inventa est.

QUINTILIAN

- 26 Et divisa autem et simplex propositio, quotiens utiliter adhiberi potest, primum debet esse aperta atque lucida (nam quid sit turpius, quam id esse obscurum ipsum, quod in eum solum adhibetur usum, ne sint cetera obscura?), tum brevis nec ullo super-vacuo onerata verbo. Non enim, quid dicamus, sed 27 de quo dicturi simus ostendimus. Obtinendum etiam, ne quid in ea desit, ne quid supersit. Superest autem sic fere, cum aut in species partimur, quod in genera partiri sit satis, aut genere posito subiicitur species, ut dicam de virtute, iustitia, continentia, cum iustitia 28 atque continentia virtutis sint species. Partitio prima est, quid sit de quo conveniat, quid de quo ambigatur. In eo, quod convenit, quid adversarius fateatur, quid nos; in eo, de quo ambigitur, quae nostrae propositiones, quae partis adversae. Pessimum vero, non eodem ordine exsequi, quo quidque proposueris.

LIBER V

PROOEMIUM

FUERUNT et clari quidem auctores, quibus solum videretur oratoris officium docere; namque et adfectus duplici ratione excludendos putabant, primum quia vitium esset omnis animi perturbatio, deinde quia iudicem a veritate depelli misericordia gratia similibusque non oporteret, et voluptatem audientium petere, cum vincendi tantum gratia diceretur, non modo agenti supervacuum, sed vix etiam viro dignum
2 arbitrabantur; plures vero, qui nec ab illis sine dubio partibus rationem orandi summoverent, hoc tamen proprium atque praecipuum crederent opus, sua confirmare et quae ex adverso proponerentur refutare.
3 Utrumcunque est (neque enim hoc loco meam interpono sententiam), hic erit liber illorum opinione maxime necessarius, quia toto haec sola tractantur; quibus sane et ea, quae de iudicialibus causis iam
4 dicta sunt, serviunt. Nam neque prooemii neque narrationis est alius usus, quam ut iudicem huic praeparent; et status nosse atque ea, de quibus

¹ cp. Ar. Rhet. I. i. 4 Also Quint. IV. v. 6.

² See III. vi.

QUINTILIAN

supra scripsimus, intueri supervacuum foret, nisi ad
 5 hanc perveniremus. Denique ex quinque quas iudicialis materiae fecimus partibus, quaecunque alia potest aliquando necessaria causae non esse; lis nulla est, cui probatione opus non sit. Eius praecepta sic optime divisuri videmur, ut prius, quae in commune ad omnes quaestiones pertinent, ostendamus; deinde, quae in quoque causae genere propria sint, exsequamur.

I. Ac prima quidem illa partitio ab Aristotéle tradita consensum fere omnium meruit, alias esse probationes, quas extra dicendi rationem acciperet orator, alias, quas ex causa traheret ipse et quodam modo gigneret. Ideoque illas ἀτέχους, id est inartificiales, has ἐτέχους, id est artificiales, vocaverunt.
 2 Ex illo priore genere sunt praeiudicia, rumores, tormenta, tabulae, iusiurandum, testes, in quibus pars maxima contentionum forensium consistit. Sed ut ipsa per se carent arte, ita summis eloquentiae viribus et adlevanda sunt plerumque et refellenda. Quare mihi videntur magnopere damnandi, qui totum hoc
 3 genus a praeceptis removerunt. Nec tamen in animo est omnia, quae aut pro his aut contra dici solent, complecti. Non enim communes locos tradere destinamus, quod esset operis infiniti, sed viam quandam

¹ III. xi.

² III. ix. 1; IV. iii. 15.

³ Rhet. I. ii. 2.

QUINTILIAN

atque rationem. Quibus demonstratis, non modo in exsequendo suas quisque vires debet adhibere, sed etiam inveniendō similia, ut quaeque condicio litium poscet. Neque enim de omnibus causis dicere quisquam potest saltem praeteritis, ut taceam de futuris.

II. Iam praeiudiciorum vis omnis tribus in generibus versatur: rebus, quae aliquando ex paribus causis sunt iudicatae, quae exempla rectius dicuntur, ut de rescissis patrum testamentis vel contra filios confirmatis; iudiciis ad ipsam causam pertinentibus, unde etiam nomen ductum est, qualia in Oppianicum facta dicuntur et a senatu adversus Milonem; aut cum de eadem causa pronuntiātum est, ut in reis deportatis et assertione secunda et partibus centumviralium, quae in duas hastas divisae sunt. Confirmantur praecipue duobus: auctoritate eorum, qui pronuntiaverunt, et similitudine rerum, de quibus quaeritur; refelluntur autem raro per contumeliam

¹ pro Cluent. xvii. sqq.

² pro Mil. v.

³ Banished persons who have been accused afresh after their restoration.

⁴ When a slave claimed his liberty by assertio through a representative known as assertor, his case was not disposed of once and for all by a first failure, but the claim might be presented anew.

QUINTILIAN

iudicum, nisi forte manifesta in iis culpa erit. Vult enim cognoscentium quisque firmam esse alterius sententiam, et ipse pronuntiaturus, nec libenter
3 exemplum, quod in se fortasse recidat, facit. Confugiendum ergo est in duobus superioribus, si res feret, ad aliquam dissimilitudinem causae; vix autem ulla est per omnia alteri similis. Si id non continget aut eadem causa erit, actionum incusanda negligentia aut de infirmitate personarum querendum, contra quas erit iudicatum, aut de gratia, quae testes corruperit, aut de invidia aut de ignorantia, aut viden-
4 dum, quid¹ causae postea accesserit. Quorum si nihil erit, licet tamen dicere multos iudiciorum casus ad inique pronuntiandum valere ideoque damnatum Rutilium, absolutos Clodium atque Catilinam. Rogandi etiam iudices, ut rem potius intueantur ipsam,
5 quam iuriurando alieno suum donent. Adversus consulta autem senatus et decreta principum vel magistratuum remedium nullum est, nisi aut inventa quantulacunque causae differentia aut aliqua vel eorundem vel eiusdem potestatis hominum posterior constitutio, quae sit priori contraria; quae si deerunt, lis non erit.

¹ videndum quid, Victor: inveniendum quod, MSS.

¹ Publius Rutilius Rufus condemned for extortion while governor of Asia, owing to a conspiracy of the publicans against him. He went into voluntary exile at Mitylene and was highly honoured by the people of Asia. 91 B.C.

QUINTILIAN

III. Famam atque rumores pars altera consensum civitatis et velut publicum testimonium vocat, altera sermonem sine ullo certo auctore dispersum, cui malignitas initium dederit, incrementum credulitas; quod nulli non etiam innocentissimo possit accidere fraude inimicorum falsa vulgantium. Exemplum utrinque non deerunt.

IV. Sicut in tormentis quoque, qui est locus frequentissimus, cum pars altera quaestionem vera fatendi necessitatem vocet, altera saepe etiam causam falsa dicendi, quod aliis patientia facile mendacium faciat, aliis infirmitas necessarium. Quid attinet de his plura? Plenae sunt orationes veterum ac novorum. Quaedam tamen in hac parte erunt propria cuiusque litis. Nam sive de habenda quaestione agatur, plurimum intererit, quis et quem postulet aut offerat et in quem et ex qua causa; sive iam erit habita, quis ei praeferat, quis et quomodo sit tortus, incredibilia dixerit an inter se constantia, perseveraverit in eo quod coeperat, an aliquid dolore mutarit, prima parte quaestionis an procedente cruciatu.

QUINTILIAN

Quae utrinque tam infinita sunt quam ipsa rerum varietas.

V. Contra tabulas quoque saepe dicendum est, cum eas non solum refelli sed etiam accusari sciamus esse usitatum. Cum sit autem in his aut scelus signatorum aut ignorantia, tutius ac facilius id, quod secundo loco diximus, tractatur, quod pauciores rei fiunt. Sed hoc ipsum argumenta ex causa trahit, si forte aut incredibile est id actum esse, quod tabulae continent, aut, ut frequentius evenit, aliis probationibus aequae inartificialibus solvitur; si aut is in quem signatum est, aut aliquis signator dicitur afuisse vel prius esse defunctus; si tempora non congruunt; si vel antecedentia vel insequentia tabulis repugnant. Inspectio etiam ipsa saepe falsum deprehendit.

VI. Iusiurandum litigatores aut offerunt suum aut non recipiunt oblatum, aut ab adversario exigunt aut recusant, cum ab ipsis exigatur. Offerre suum sine illa condicione, ut vel adversarius iuret, fere improbum est. Qui tamen id faciet, aut vita se tuebitur, ¹ An oath might be taken by one of the parties as an alternative to evidence. In court such an oath might be taken only on the proposal of the adversary; the litigant might not swear on his own initiative, although an oath might be taken voluntarily before the case came into court. The matter of the oath rested with the profferer, and the taking of such a proffered oath meant victory for the swearer.

QUINTILIAN

ut eum non sit credibile peieraturum; aut ipsa vi religionis, in qua plus fidei consequetur, si id egerit, ut non cupide ad hoc descendere sed ne hoc quidem recusare videatur; aut, si causa patiatur, modo litis, propter quam devoturus se ipse non fuerit; aut praeter alia causae instrumenta adiicit ex abundanti 3 hanc quoque conscientiae suae fiduciam. Qui non recipiet, et iniquam condicionem et a multis contemni iurisiurandi metum dicet, cum etiam philosophi quidam sint reperti, qui deos agere rerum humanarum curam negarent; eum vero, qui nullo deferente iurare sit paratus, et ipsum velle de causa sua pronuntiare et, quam id quod offert leve ac facile credat, ostend-
 4 dere. At is, qui defert, agere modeste videtur, cum litis adversarium iudicem faciat, et eum cuius cognitio est onere liberat, qui profecto alieno iureiurando stari
 5 quam suo mavult. Quo difficilior recusatio est, nisi forte res est ea, quam credibile sit notam ipsi non esse. Quae excusatio si deerit, hoc unum relinque-

QUINTILIAN

tur, ut invidiam sibi quaeri ab adversario dicat atque id agi, ut in causa, in qua vincere non possit, queri possit; itaque hominem quidem malum occupatorum hanc condicionem fuisse, se autem probare malle quae adfirmet, quam dubium cuiquam relin-6 quere, an peierarit. Sed nobis adolescentibus seniores in agendo facti praecipere solebant, ne temere unquam iusiurandum deferremus, sicut neque optio iudicis adversario esset permittenda nec ex advocatis partis adversae iudex eligendus; nam, si dicere contraria turpe advocato videretur, certe turpius habendum, facere quod noceat.

VII. Maximus tamen patronis circa testimonia sudor est. Ea dicuntur aut per tabulas aut a praesentibus. Simplicior contra tabulas pugna. Nam et minus obstitisse videtur pudor inter paucos signatores, et pro diffidentia premitur absentia. Si reprehensionem non capit ipsa persona, infamare signatores
 2 licet. Tacita praeterea quaedam cogitatio refragatur his omnibus, quod nemo per tabulas dat testimonium nisi sua voluntate; quo ipso non esse amicum ei se, ¹ The choice of the single iudex in civil cases rested with the plaintiff, though the defendant had the right to refuse the person proposed.

² Not an actual advocate, but a supporter and adviser on points of law.

QUINTILIAN

contra quem dicit, fatetur. Neque tamen protinus cesserit orator, quo minus et amicus pro amico et inimicus contra inimicum possit verum, si integra sit ei fides, dicere. Sed late locus uterque tractatur.

- 3 Cum praesentibus vero ingens dimicatio est, ideoque velut duplici contra eos proque iis acie configitur actionum et interrogationum. In actionibus primum generaliter pro testibus atque in testes dici solet.
- 4 Et hic communis locus, cum pars altera nullam firmiorem probationem esse contendit, quam quae sit hominum scientia nixa; altera ad detrahendam illis fidem omnia, per quae fieri soleant falsa testimonia,
- 5 enumerat. Sequens ratio est cum specialiter quidem, sed tamen multos pariter invadere patroni solent. Nam et gentium simul universarum elevata testimonia ab oratoribus scimus et tota genera testimoniorum: ut de auditionibus; non enim ipsos esse testes sed iniuratorum adferre voces; ut in causis repetundarum, qui se reo numerasse pecunias iurant, litigatorum non
- 6 testium habendos loco. Interim adversus singulos dirigitur actio; quod insectationis genus et per-

¹ Interrogatio includes both the examination in chief and cross-examination.

² e.g. in cases of extortion, where a whole province might give evidence against the accused.

QUINTILIAN

- mixtum defensionis legimus in orationibus plurimis et 7 separatim editum, sicut in Vatinius testem. Totum igitur excutiamus locum, quando universam institu-tionem aggressi sumus. Sufficiebant alioqui libri duo a Domitio Afro in hanc rem compositi, quem adolescentulus senem colui, ut non lecta mihi tantum ea, sed pleraque ex ipso sint cognita. Is verissime praecepit primum esse in hac parte officium oratoris, ut
totam causam familiariter norit; quod sine dubio ad
8 omnia pertinet. Id quomodo contingat, explicabimus, cum ad destinatum huic parti locum venerimus. Ea
res suggeret materiam interrogationi et veluti tela
ad manum subministrabit; eadem docebit, ad quae iudicis animus actione sit praeparandus. Debet enim vel fieri vel detrahi testibus fides oratione perpetua, quia sic quisque dictis movetur, ut est ad credendum
vel non credendum ante formatus.
- 9 Et quoniam duo genera sunt testium, aut volun-
tariorum aut eorum, quibus in iudiciis publicis lege denuntiari solet, quorum altero pars utraque utitur, alterum accusatoribus tantum concessum est, sepa-
remus officium dantis testes et refellentis.
- 10 Qui voluntarium producit, scire quid is dicturus

¹ Vatinius had appeared as a witness against Sestius, who was defended by Cicero.

² XII. viii.

³ In civil cases evidence was as a rule voluntary; in criminal cases the accuser might subpoena witnesses, while the defence was restricted to voluntary testimony.

QUINTILIAN

sit potest; ideoque faciliorem videtur in rogando habere rationem. Sed haec quoque pars acumen ac vigilantiam poscit, providendumque, ne timidus, ne 11 inconstans, ne imprudens testis sit; turbantur enim et a patronis diversae partis inducuntur in laqueos et plus deprehensi nocent quam firmi et interriti profuissent. Multum igitur domi ante versandi, variis percontationibus, quales haberi ab adversario possint, explorandi sunt. Sic fit, ut aut constant sibi aut, si quid titubaverint, opportuna rursus eius a quo producti sunt interrogatione velut in gradum reponantur.
 12 In iis quoque adhuc, qui constiterint sibi, vitandae insidiae; nam frequenter subiici ab adversario solent et omnia profutura polliciti diversa respondent
 et auctoritatem habent non arguentium illa, sed con-13 fitentium. Explorandum igitur, quas causas laedendi adversarium adferant; nec id sat est inimicos fuisse, sed an desiderint, an per hoc ipsum reconciliari velint, ne corrupti sint, ne poenitentia propositum muta-

QUINTILIAN

verint. Quod cum in iis quoque, qui ea, quae dicturi videntur, re vera sciunt, necessarium est praecavere; multo magis in iis, qui se dicturos, quae falsa sunt, 14 pollicentur. Nam et frequentior eorum poenitentia est et promissum suspectius et, si perseverarint, reprehensio facilior.

15 Eorum vero, quibus denuntiatur, pars testium est quae reum laedere velit, pars quae nolit, idque interim scit accusator interim nescit. Fingamus in praesentia scire; in utroque tamen genere summis 16 artibus interrogantis opus est. Nam si habet testem cupidum laedendi, cavere debet hoc ipsum, ne cupiditas eius appareat, nec statim de eo, quod in iudicium venit, rogare, sed aliquo circuitu ad id pervenire, ut illi, quod maxime dicere voluit, videatur expressum; nec nimium instare interrogationi, ne ad omnia respondendo testis fidem suam minuat, sed in tantum evolare eum, quantum sumere ex uno satis sit. At in eo, 17 qui verum invitus dicturus est, prima felicitas interrogantis extorquere quod is noluerit. Hoc non alio modo fieri potest quam longius interrogatione repetita. Respondebit enim, quae nocere causae non arbitra-

QUINTILIAN

- bitur; ex pluribus deinde, quae confessus erit, eo perducetur ut quod dicere non vult negare non possit.
- 18 Nam, ut in oratione sparsa plerumque colligimus argumenta, quae per se nihil reum aggravare videantur, congregatione deinde eorum factum convincimus, ita huiusmodi testis multa de anteactis, multa de insectis, loco, tempore, persona, ceteris est interrogandus, ut in aliquod responsum incidat, post quod illi vel fateri quae volumus necesse sit vel iis quae
- 19 iam dixerit repugnare. Id si non contingit, reliquum erit, ut eum nolle dicere manifestum sit, protrahendusque, ut in aliquo, quod vel extra causam sit, deprehendatur; tenendus etiam diutius, ut omnia ac plura quam res desiderat pro reo dicendo suspectus iudici fiat; quo non minus nocebit, quam si vera in
- 20 reum dixisset. At si (quod secundo loco diximus) nesciet actor, quid propositi testis attulerit, paulatim et, ut dicitur, pedetentim interrogando experietur animum eius et ad id responsum quod eliciendum
- 21 erit per gradus ducet. Sed, quia nonnunquam sunt hae quoque testium artes, ut primo ad voluntatem respondeant, quo maiore fide diversa postea dicant,
- 178

QUINTILIAN

est actoris ¹ suspectum testem, dum prodest, dimittere.

- 22 Patronorum, in parte expeditior, in parte difficilior interrogatio est. Difficilior hoc, quod raro unquam possunt ante iudicium scire, quid testis dicturus sit; expeditior, quod, cum interrogandus est, sciunt quid
- 23 dixerit. Itaque, quod in eo incertum est, cura et inquisitione opus est, quis reum premat, quas et quibus ex causis inimicitias habeat: eaque in oratione praedicenda atque amolienda sunt, sive odio conflatos testes, sive invidia, sive gratia, sive pecunia, videri volumus. Et si deficietur numero pars diversa, paucitatem; si abundabit, conspiracyem; si humiles producet, vilitatem; si potentes, gratiam oportebit
- 24 incessere. Plus tamen proderit causas, propter quas reum laedant, exponere; quae sunt variae et pro condicione cuiusque litis aut litigatoris. Nam contra illa, quae supra diximus, simili ratione responderi locis communibus solet, quia ut in paucis atque humilibus accusator simplicitate gloriari potest, quod neminem praeter eos, qui possint scire, quaesierit,

¹ actoris, Regius; oratoris, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

et multos atque honestos commendare aliquanto est 25 facilius. Verum interim et singulos ut exornare, ita destruere contingit, aut recitatis in actione testi-moniis¹ aut testibus nominatis. Quod iis tempori-bus, quibus testis non post finitas actiones rogabatur, et facilius et frequentius fuit. Quid autem in quemque testium dicendum sit, sumi nisi ex ipsorum personis non potest.

26 Reliquae interrogandi sunt partes. Qua in re primum est nosse testem. Nam timidus, terreri, stultus decipi, iracundus concitari, ambitiosus inflari potest; prudens vero et constans vel tanquam inimi-cus et pervicax dimittendus statim vel non interrogatione, sed brevi interlocutione patroni refutandus
 est aut aliquo, si continget, urbane dicto refrigerandus aut, si quid in eius vitam dici poterit, infamia crimi-27 num destruendus. Probos quosdam et verecundos non aspere incessere profuit; nam saepe, qui adver-
 sus insectantem pugnassent, modestia mitigantur.
 Omnis autem interrogatio aut in causa est aut extra causam. In causa, sicut accusatori praecepimus,

¹ testimoniis added by Halm, some such word having been omitted by the MSS.

¹ It is not clear to what Quintilian refers. There are, it is true, passages in Cicero where the orator speaks of evidence as already given, but the speeches where these references are found are all second pleadings.

QUINTILIAN

patronus quoque altius et unde nihil suspecti sit repetita percontatione, priora sequentibus applicando
saepe eo perducit homines, ut invitis quod prosit 28 extorqueat. Eius rei sine dubio neque disciplina ulla in scholis neque exercitatio traditur, et naturali magis acuminē aut usu contingit haec virtus. Si quod tamen exemplum ad imitationem demonstrandum sit, solum est, quod ex dialogis Socraticorum maximeque Platonis duci potest; in quibus adeo scitae sunt interrogationes, ut, cum plerisque bene
respondeatur, res tamen ad id quod volunt efficere 29 perveniat. Illud fortuna interim praestat, ut aliquid, quod inter se parum consentiat, a teste dicatur;
interim, quod saepius evenit, ut testis testi diversa dicat. Acuta autem interrogatio ad hoc, quod casu 30 fieri solet, etiam ratione perducet. Extra causam quoque multa, quae prosint, rogari solent, de vita testium aliorum, de sua quisque, si turpitudō, si humilitas, si amicitia accusatoris, si inimicitiae cum reo, in quibus aut dicant aliquid quod prosit, aut in

¹ Above, § 17, 18.

QUINTILIAN

mendacio vel cupiditate laedendi deprehendantur.

- 31 Sed in primis interrogatio cum debet esse circum-
specta, quia multa contra patronos venuste testis saepe respondet, eique praecipue vulgo favetur; tum verbis quam maxime ex medio sumptis, ut qui rogatur (is autem est saepius imperitus) intelligat aut ne in-telligere se neget, quod interrogantis non leve frigus 32 est. Illae vero pessimae artes, testem subornatum in subsellia adversarii mittere, ut inde excitatus plus noceat vel dicendo contra reum cum quo sederit, vel, cum adiuvisse testimonio videbitur, faciendo ex industria multa immodeste atque intemperanter, per quae non a se tantum dictis detrahat fidem, sed
ceteris quoque, qui profuerant, auferat auctoritatem;
quorum mentionem habui, non ut fierent, sed ut vitarentur.

Saepe inter se collidi solent inde testatio hinc testes; locus utrinque; haec enim se pars iureiu-33 rando, illa consensu signantium tuetur. Saepe inter testes et argumenta quaesitum est. Inde scientiam

¹ An over-statement, since in many cases the signatories could only testify that the statement was that actually made by the deponent; with its truth they were not necessarily concerned.

QUINTILIAN

in testibus et religionem, ingenia esse in argumentis dicitur; hinc testem gratia, metu, pecunia, ira, odio, amicitia, ambitu fieri; argumenta ex natura duci, in 34 his iudicem sibi, in illis alii credere. Communia haec pluribus causis, multumque iactata sunt et semper tamen iactabuntur. Aliquando utrinque sunt testes, et quaestio sequitur ex ipsis, utri meliores viri; ex causis, utri magis credibilia dixerint; ex
35 litigatoribus, utri gratia magis valuerint. His adii- cere si qui volet ea, quae divina testimonia vocant, ex responsis, oraculis, ominibus, duplicem sciat esse eorum tractatum; generalem alterum, in quo inter Stoicos et Epicuri sectam secutos pugna perpetua est, regaturne providentia mundus; specialem alterum circa partes divinationis, ut quaeque in quaestionem 36 cadit. Aliter enim oraculorum aliter aruspicum, augurum, coniectorum, mathematicorum fides confirmari aut refelli potest, cum sit rerum ipsarum ratio diversa. Circa eiusmodi quoque instrumenta firmanda vel destruenda multum habet operis oratio, si quae sint voces per vinum, somnum, dementiam emissae, vel excepta parvulorum indicia, quos pars altera nihil fingere, altera nihil iudicare dictura est.

QUINTILIAN

37 Nec tantum praestari hoc genus potenter, sed etiam, ubi non est, desiderari solet: Pecuniam dedisti; quis numeravit? ubi? unde? Venenum arguis; ubi emi? a quo? quanti? per quem dedi? quo conscio? Quae fere omnia pro Cluentio Cicero in crimine veneficii excutit. Haec de inartificialibus quam brevissime potui.

VIII. Pars altera probationum, quae est tota in arte constatque rebus ad faciendam fidem apposis, plerumque aut omnino negligitur aut levissime attingitur ab iis, qui argumenta velut horrida et confragosa vitantes amoenioribus locis desident, neque aliter quam ii, qui traduntur a poetis gustu cuiusdam apud Lotophagos graminis et Sirenum cantu deleniti voluptatem saluti praetulisse, dum laudis falsam imaginem persequuntur, ipsa, propter quam dicitur, victoria cedunt. Atqui cetera, quae continuo magis orationis tractu decurrunt, in auxilium atque ornamentum argumentorum comparantur, nervisque illis, quibus causa continetur, adiciunt inducti super cor-

¹ cp. lx. 167.

QUINTILIAN

poris speciem : ut, si forte quid factum ira vel metu
vel cupiditate dicatur, latius, quae cuiusque adfectus natura sit, prosequamur. Iisdem laudamus, incusamus, augemus, minuímus, describimus, deterremus, 3 quærimur, consolamur, hortamur. Sed horum esse opera in rebus aut certis aut de quibus tanquam certis loquimur potest. Nèc abnuerim esse aliquid in delectatione, multum vero in commovendis adfecti-bus ; sed haec ipsa plus valent, cum se didicisse iudex putat, quod consequi nisi argumentatione aliaque omni fide rerum non possumus.

✦ Quorum priusquam partiamur species, indicandum
est esse quaedam in omni probationum genere com-munia. Nam neque ulla quaestio est, quae non sit aut in re aut in persona ; neque esse argumentorum
loci possunt nisi in iis, quae rebus aut personis
5 accidunt, eaque aut per se inspicí, solent aut ad aliud reférri ; nec ulla confirmatio nisi aut ex consequentibus aut ex repugnantibus, et haec, necesse
est aut ex praeterito tempore aut ex coniuncto aut ex insequenti petere ; nec ulla res probari nisi ex alia potest, eaque sit oportet aut maior aut par aut minor.
6 Argumenta vero reperiuntur aut in quaestionibus, quae etiam separatae a complexu rerum personarumque spectari per se possint, aut in ipsa causa,

QUINTILIAN

cum invenitur aliquid in ea non ex communi ratione ductum, sed eius iudicii, de quo cognoscitur, proprium. Probationum praeterea omnium aliae sunt necessariae, aliae credibiles, aliae non repugnantes.

- 7 Et adhuc omnium probationum quadruplex ratio est, ut vel quia est aliquid, aliud non sit; ut Dies est, nox non est; vel quia est aliquid, et aliud sit: Sol est supra terram, dies est; vel quia aliquid non est, aliud sit: Nox non est, dies est; vel quia aliquid non est, nec aliud sit: Non est rationalis, nec homo est. His in universum praedictis partes subiiciam.

- IX. Omnis igitur probatio artificialis constat aut signis aut argumentis aut exemplis. Nec ignoro plerisque videri signa partem argumentorum. Quae mihi separandi ratio haec fuit prima, quod sunt paene ex illis inartificialibus; cruenta enim vestis et clamor et livor et talia sunt instrumenta, qualia tabulae, rumores, testes; nec inveniuntur ab oratore,
2 sed ad eum cum ipsa causa deferuntur; altera, quod signa, sive indubitata sunt, non sunt argumenta, quia, ubi illa sunt, quaestio non est, argumento autem nisi in re controversa locus esse non potest; sive dubia, non sunt argumenta sed ipsa argumentis egent.
3 Dividuntur autem in has duas primas species,

QUINTILIAN

quod eorum alia sunt, ut dixi, quae necessaria sunt, alia quae non necessaria.¹ Priora illa sunt quae
 aliter habere se non possunt, quae Graeci vocant ΤΕΚΜΗΡΙΑ, quia sunt ^{ἄλυστα σημεῖα} ἅλυστα σημεῖα, quae mihi vix
 pertinere ad praecepta artis videntur; nam ubi est
 4 signum insolubile, ibi ne lis quidem est. Id autem accidit, cum quid aut necesse est fieri factumve esse aut omnino non potest fieri vel esse factum; quo in causis posito non est lis facti. Hoc genus per omnia 5 tempora perpendi solet. Nam et coisse eam cum viro, quae peperit, quod est praeteriti, et fluctus esse, cum magna vis venti in mare incubuit, quod
 coniuncti, et eum mori, cuius cor est vulneratum, quod futuri, necesse est. Nec fieri potest, ut ibi messis sit, ubi satum non est, ut quis Romae sit,
 cum est Athenis, ut sit ferro vulneratus, qui sine 6 cicatrice est. Sed quaedam et retrorsum idem valent, ut vivere hominem qui spirat, et spirare qui vivit.
 Quedam in contrarium non recurrent; nec enim, quia movetur qui ingreditur, etiam ingreditur qui 7 movetur. Quare potest et coisse cum viro, quae non peperit, et non esse ventus in mari, cum est fluctus, neque utique cor eius vulneratum esse, qui perit. Ac similiter satum fuisse potest, ubi non

¹ sunt . . . non necessaria. added by Regius.

QUINTILIAN.

fuit messis, nec fuisse Romae, qui non fuit Athenis, nec fuisse ferro vulneratus, qui habet cicatricem.

8 Alia sunt signa non necessaria, quae ^{ἄκοτα} ~~εἰκότα~~ Graeci vocant; quae etiamsi ad tollendam dubitationem sola non sufficiunt, tamen adiuncta ceteris plurimum valent.

9 Signum vocatur, ut dixi, ^{σημεῖον} ~~σημεῖον~~, quanquam id quidam indicium quidam vestigium nominaverunt, per quod alia res intelligitur, ut per sanguinem caedes.

At sanguis vel ex hostia respersisse vestem potest vel e naribus profluxisse: non utique, qui vestem

10 cruentam habuerit, homicidium fecerit. Sed ut per se non sufficit, ita ceteris adiunctum testimonii loco ducitur, si inimicus, si minatus ante, si eodem in loco fuit; quibus signum cum accessit, efficit

11 ut, quae suspecta erant, certa videantur. Alioqui sunt quaedam signa utrique parti communia, ut livores, tumores (nam videri possunt et veneficii et crudelitatis) et vulnus in pectore sua manu et aliena perisse dicentibus, in quo est. Haec proinde firma habentur atque extrinsecus adiuvantur.

12 Eorum autem, quae signa sunt quidem, sed non necessaria, genus Hermagoras putat, non esse

198

QUINTILIAN

virginem Atalantam, quia cum iuvenibus per silvas vagetur. Quod si receperimus, vereor, ne omnia quae ex facto ducuntur signa faciamus. Eadem 13 tamen ratione qua signa tractantur. Nec mihi videntur Areopagitae, cum damnaverint puerum coturnicum oculos eruentem, aliud iudicasse quam id
 signum esse perniciosissimae mentis multisque malo futurae, si adolevisset. Unde Spurii Maelii Marci-Manlii popularitas signum adfectati regni est existi-14 matum. Sed vereor, ne longe nimium nos ducat haec via. Nam, si est signum adulterae lavari cum viris, erit et convivere cum adolescentibus, deinde
 etiam familiariter alicuius amicitia uti; fortasse corpus vulsum, fractum incessum, vestem muliebrem dixerit mollis et parum viri signa, si cui (cum signum
 id proprie sit, quod ex eo, de quo quaeritur, natum sub oculos venit) ut sanguis e caede, ita illa ex im-15 pudicitia fluere videantur. Ea quoque quae, quia plerumque observata sunt, vulgo signa creduntur, ut prognostica. Vento rubet aurea Phoebe et Cornix plena pluviam vocat improba voce, si causas ex qualitate

¹ Verg. G. i. 431.

² ib. i. 388.

QUINTILIAN

16 caeli trahunt, sane ita appellentur. Nam si vento rubet luna, signum venti est rubor. Et si, ut idem poeta colligit, densatus et laxatus aer facit, ut sit inde ille avium concentus, idem sentiemus. Sunt autem signa etiam parva magnorum, ut vel haec ipsa cornix; nam maiora minorum esse, nemo miratur.

X. Nunc de argumentis. Hoc enim nomine complectimur omnia, quae Graeci ἐνθυμήματα, ἐπιχειρήματα, ἀποδείξεις vocant, quanquam apud illos est aliqua horum nominum differentia, etiamsi vis eodem fere tendit. Nam enthyméma (quod nos commentum sane aut commentationem interpretémur, quia aliter non possumus, Graeco melius usúri) unum intellectum habet, quo omnia mente concepta significat (sed nunc non de eo loquimur); alterum, quo sententiam
2 cum ratione; tertium, quo certam quandam argumenti conclusionem vel ex consequentibus vel ex repugnantibus, quanquam de hoc parum convenit. Sunt enim, qui illud prius epichiréma dicant, pluresque invenias in ea opinione, ut id demum, quod pugna constat, enthyméma accipi velint, et ideo illud
3 Cornificius contrarium appellat. Hunc alii rhetoricum syllogísmum, alii imperfectum syllogismum vocaverunt, quia nec distinctis nec totidem partibus

¹ Verg. G. i. 422.

² v. viii. 5; xiv. 2. n.

³ See v. xiv. 2, viii. v. 9.

QUINTILIAN

concluderetur¹; quod sane non utique ab oratore de-4 sideratur. Epichirema Valgius aggressionem vocat; verius autem iudico, non nostram administrationem
 sed ipsam rem quam aggredimur, id est argumen-tum, quo aliquid probaturi sumus, etiamsi nondum verbis explanatum, iam tamen mente conceptum, 5 epichirema dici. Aliis videtur non destinata vel inchoata, sed perfecta probatio hoc nomen accipere, ultima specie; ideoque propria eius appellatio et maxime in usu est posita, qua significatur certa quaedam sententiae comprehensio, quae ex tribus
 6 minimum partibus constat. Quidam epichirema rationem appellarunt, Cicero melius ratiocinatio-nem, quanquam et ille nomen hoc duxisse magis a syllogismo videtur. Nam et statum syllogisticum ratiocinativum appellat, exemplisque utitur philoso-phorum. Et quoniam est quaedam inter syllogismum et epichirema vicinitas, potest videri hoc nomine 7 recte abusus. Ἀποδείξις est evidens probatio, ideoque apud Geometras γραμμικαὶ ἀποδείξεις dicuntur.
 Hanc et ab epichiremate Caecilius putat differre
 solo genere conclusionis et esse apodixin imperfectum epichirema eadem causa, qua diximus enthymema syllogismo distare. Nam et epichirema syllogismi pars
 est. Quidam inesse epichiremati apodixin putant

¹ See III. i. 18. A rhetorician of the reign of Augustus.

² The last or lowest species. cp. § 56 and VII. i. 23.

³ i.e. the major and minor premisses and the conclusion.
 See v. xiv. 6 sqq. .

QUINTILIAN

8 et esse partem eius confirmantem. Utrumque autem quanquam diversi auctores eodem modo finiunt, ut sit ratio per ea, quae certa sunt, fidem dubiis adferens; quae natura est omnium argumentorum, neque enim certa incertis declarantur. Haec omnia generaliter πίστεως appellant, quod etiamsi propria interpretatione dicere fidem possumus, apertius tamen probationem interpretabimur. Sed
9 argumentum quoque plura significat. Nam et fabulae ad actum scenarum compositae argumenta dicuntur, et orationum Ciceronis velut thema ipse exponens Pedianus, Argumentum, inquit, tale est; et ipse Cicero ad Brutum ita scribit: Veritus fortasse, ne nos in Catonem nostrum transferremus illinc aliquid, etsi argumentum simile non erat. Quo apparet omnem ad
10 scribendum destinatam materiam ita appellari. Nec mirum, cum id inter opifices quoque vulgatum sit, unde Vergilius, Argumentum ingens; vulgoque paulo numerosius opus dicitur argumentosum. Sed nunc de eo dicendum argumento est, quod probationem praestat. Celsus quidem probationem,¹ indicium, fidem, aggressionem eiusdem rei nomina facit, parum 11 distincte, ut arbitror. Nam probatio et fides efficitur non tantum per haec quae sunt rationis, sed etiam per inartificialia. Signum autem, quod ille indicium vocat, ab argumentis iam separavi. Ergo, cum sit

¹ praestat . . . probationem, added by Meister.

¹ In some letter now lost.

² Aen. vii. 791, with reference to the design on the shield of Turnus.

³ v. ix. 2.

QUINTILIAN

- argumentum ratio probationem praestans, qua colligitur aliud per aliud, et quae quod est dubium per id quod dubium non est confirmat, necesse est esse
- 12 aliquid in causa, quod probatione non egeat. Alioqui nihil erit quo probemus, nisi fuerit quod aut sit verum aut videatur, ex quo dubiis fides fiat. Pro certis autem habemus primum, quae sensibus percipiuntur, ut quae videmus, audimus, qualia sunt signa; deinde ea, in quae communi opinione consensum est, deos
- 13 esse, praestandam pietatem parentibus; praeterea, quae legibus cauta sunt, quae persuasione etiamsi non omnium hominum, eius tamen civitatis aut gentis, in qua res agitur, in mores recepta sunt, ut pleraque in iure non legibus sed moribus constant; si quid inter utramque partem convenit, si quid probatum est, denique cuicumque adversarius non contradicit.
- 14 Sic enim fiet argumentum, *Cum providentia mundus regatur, administranda respublica est*¹; sequitur ut administranda respublica sit, si liquebit mundum providentia
- 15 regi. Debet etiam nota esse recte argumenta tractaturo vis et natura omnium rerum, et quid quaeque earum plerumque efficiat; hinc enim sunt, quae εἰκότα dicuntur.
- 16 Credibilium autem genera sunt tria: unum firmissimum, quia fere accidit, ut liberos a parentibus

¹ est . . . respublica, added by Halm after Regius.

QUINTILIAN

- amari ; alterum velut propensius, eum qui recte valeat in crastinum perventurum ; tertium tantum non repugnans, in domo furtum factum ab eo qui domi fuit.
- 17 Ideoque Aristotélēs in secundo de Arte Rhetorica libro diligentissime est exsecutus, quid cuique rei et quid cuique homini soleret accidere, et quas res quosque homines quibus rebus aut hominibus vel conciliasset vel alienasset ipsa natura : ut divitias quid sequatur aut ambitum aut superstitionem, quid boni probent, quid mali petant, quid milites, quid rustici, quo quaeque modo res vitari vel appeti soleat.
- 18 Verum hoc exsequi mitto ; non enim longum tantum, sed etiam impossibile aut potius infinitum est, praeterea positum in communi omnium intellectu. Si quis tamen desideraverit, a quo peteret, ostendi.
- 19 Omnia autem credibilia, in quibus pars maxima consistit argumentationis, ex huiusmodi fontibus fluunt : an credibile sit a filio patrem occisum, incestum cum filia commissum ; et contra, veneficium in noverca, adulterium in luxurioso ; illa quoque, an scelus palam factum, an falsum propter exiguam summam, quia suos quidque horum velut mores habet, plerumque
-

QUINTILIAN

1072-4 tamen, non semper; alioqui indubitata essent, non argumenta.

- 20 Excutiamus nunc argumentorum locos; quanquam quibusdam hi quoque, de quibus supra dixi, videntur. Locos appello non, ut vulgo nunc intelliguntur, in luxuriam et adulterium et similia; sed sedes argumentorum, in quibus latent, ex quibus sunt petenda.
- 21 Nam, ut in terra non omni generantur omnia, nec avem aut feram reperiās, ubi quaeque nasci aut morari soleat ignarus, et piscium quoque genera alia planis gaudent alia saxosis, regionibus etiam litoribusque discreta sunt, nec hēlopem nostro mari aut scarum ducas, ita non omne argumentum undique
- 22 venit ideoque non passim quaerendum est. Multus alioqui error est; exhausto labore, quod non ratione scrutābimur, non poterimus invenire nisi casu. At si sciērimus, ubi quodque nascatur, cum ad locum ventum erit, facile quod in eo est pervidebimus.
- 23 In primis igitur argumenta a persona ducenda sunt; cum sit, ut dixi, divisio, ut omnia in haec duo partiamur, res atque personas, ut causa, tempus, locus, occasio, instrumentum, modus et cetera, rerum

¹ In previous chapter.

² See II. iv. 22, v. xii. 6 and xiii. 57.

³ v. viii. 4.

QUINTILIAN

- sint accidentia. Personis autem non quidquid accidit exsequendum mihi est, ut plerique fecerunt, sed unde
- 24 argumenta sumi possunt. Ea porro sunt, genus, nam similes parentibus ac maioribus suis plerumque creduntur, et nonnunquam ad honeste turpiterque vivendum inde causae fluunt; natio, nam et gentibus proprii mores sunt, nec idem in barbaro, Romano,
- 25 Graeco probabile est; patria, quia similiter etiam civitatum leges, instituta, opiniones habent differentiam; sexus, ut latrocinium facilius in viro, veneficium in femina credas; aetas, quia aliud aliis annis magis convenit; educatio et disciplina, quoniam refert, a quibus et quo quisque modo sit institutus;
- 26 habitus corporis, ducitur enim frequenter in argumentum species libidinis, robur petulantiae, his contraria in diversum; fortuna, neque enim idem credibile est in divite ac paupere, propinquis amicis clientibus abundante et his omnibus destituto; conditionis etiam distantia, nam clarus an obscurus, magistratus an privatus, pater an filius, civis an peregrinus, liber an servus, maritus an caelebs, parens liberorum an orbus sit, plurimum distat;
- 27 animi natura, etenim avaritia, iracundia, misericordia, crudelitas, severitas aliaque his similia adferunt frequenter fidem aut detrahunt, sicut victus luxuriosus

QUINTILIAN

- an frugi an sordidus, quaeritur; studia quoque, nam rusticus, forensis, negotiator, miles, navigator, medicus 28 aliud atque aliud efficiunt. Intuendum etiam, quid adfectet quisque, locuples videri an disertus, iustus an potens. Spectantur ante acta dictaque, ex praeteritis enim aestimari solent praesentia. His adiiciunt quidam commotionem; hanc accipi volunt temporarium animi motum, sicut iram, pavorem;
 29 consilia autem et praesentis et praeteriti et futuri temporis; quae mihi, etiamsi personis accidunt, per se referenda tamen ad illam partem argumentorum videntur, quam ex causis ducimus; sicut habitus quidam animi, quo tractatur, amicus an inimicus.
 30 Ponunt in persona et nomen; quod quidem ei accidere necesse est, sed in argumentum raro cadit, nisi cum aut ex causa datum est, ut Sapiens, Magnus, Pius; aut et ipsum alicuius cogitationis attulit causam, ut Lentulo coniurationis, quod libris Sibyllinis aruspicumque responsis dominatio dari tribus Corneliis dicebatur, seque eum tertium esse credebat post Sullam Cinnaeque, quia et ipse Cornelius erat.
 31 Nam et illud apud Euripidem frigidum sane, quod nomen Polynicis, ut argumentum morum, frater incessit. Locorum tamen ex eo frequens materia, qua

¹ Publius Cornelius Lentulus Sura, Catilinarian conspirator. cp. Sall. Cat. c. 46.

² Phoeniss. 636. ἀληθῶς δ' ὄνομα Πολυνείκη πατὴρ ἔθετό σοι θεία προνοία νεικέων ἐπώνυμον, "with truth did our father call thee Polynices with divine foreknowledge naming thee after 'strife.'" ³ See vi. iii. 53.

QUINTILIAN

Cicero in Verrem non semel usus est. Haec fere circa personas sunt aut his similia. Neque enim complecti omnia vel hac in parte vel in ceteris possumus, contenti rationem plura quaesituris ostendere.

- 32 Nunc ad res transeo, in quibus maxime sunt personis iuncta, quae agimus, ideoque, prima tractanda. In omnibus porro, quae fiunt, quaeritur aut Quare? aut Ubi? aut Quando? aut Quomodo? aut Per quae
33 facta sunt? Ducuntur igitur argumenta ex causis factorum vel futurorum; quarum materiam, quam quidam ἔλγν, alii δύνανται nominaverunt, in duo genera, sed quaternas utriusque dividunt species. Nam fere versatur ratio faciendi circa bonorum adptionem, incrementum, conservationem, usum, aut malorum evitationem, liberationem, imminutionem, toleran-
34 tiam; quae et in deliberando plurimum valent. Sed honestas¹ causas habent recta, prava contra ex falsis opinionibus veniunt. Nam est his initium ex iis, quae credunt bona aut mala; inde errores existunt et pessimi adfectus, in quibus sunt ira, odium, invidia, cupiditas, spes, ambitus, audacia, metus, cetera generis eiusdem. Accedunt aliquando fortuita, ebrietas, ignorantia, quae interim ad veniam valent, interim ad probationem criminis, ut si quis, dum alii insidia-
35 tur, alium dicitur interemisse. Causae porro non ad convincendum modo, quod obiicitur, sed ad defendendum quoque excuti solent, cum quis se recte

¹ honestas W. Meyer: has B: haec A.

QUINTILIAN

fecisse, id est honesta causa, contendit; qua de re 36 latius in tertio libro dictum est. Finitionis quoque quaestiones ex causis interim pendent. An tyranní-nícida, qui tyrannum, a quo deprehensus in adulterio fuerat, occidit? An sacrilégus, qui, ut hostes urbe 37 expélleret, arma templo adfixa detraxit? Ducuntur argumenta et ex loco. Spectatur enim ad fidem probationis, montanus an planus, maritimus an medi-terraneus, consitus an incultus, frequens an desertus, propínquus an remotus, opportunus consiliis an ad-
 versus; quam partem vidéimus vehementissime pro 38 Milone tractasse Ciceronem. Et haec quidem ac similia ad coniecturam frequentius pertinent, sed interim ad ius quoque: privatus an publicus, sacer
 an profanus, noster an alienus; ut in persona, magistratus, pater, peregrinus. Hinc enim quaestiones 39 oriuntur: *Privatam pecuniam sustulisti; verum quia de templo, non furtum sed sacrilégium est. Occidisti aduterum, quod lex permittit; sed quia in lupanári, caedes
 est. Iniuriam fecisti; sed quia magistratui, maiestatis* 40 actio est. Vel contra: Licuit, quia pater eram, quia magistratus. Sed circa facti controversiam argumenta praestant, circa iuris lites materiam quaestionum.
 Ad qualitatem quoque frequenter pertinet locus,

¹ III. xi. 4-9.

² pro Mil. xx.

QUINTILIAN

- neque enim idem ubique aut licet aut decorum est ;
 quin etiam in qua quidque civitate quaeratur interest, 41 moribus enim et legibus distant. Ad commendatio-nem quoque et invidiam valet. Nam et Ajax apud Ovidium : Ante rates, inquit, agimus causam, et mecum
confertur Ulixes ? Et Miloni inter cetera obiectum est, quod Clodius in monumentis ab eo maiorum 42 suorum esset occisus. Ad suadendi momenta idem valet, sicut tempus, cuius tractatum subiungam.
 Eius autem, ut alio loco iam dixi, duplex significatio est ; generaliter enim et specialiter accipitur. Prius illud est :—nunc, olim, sub Alexandro, cum apud Ilium pugnatum est, denique praeteritum, instans, futurum.
 Hoc sequens habet et constituta discrimina :—aestate,
 hieme, noctu, interdiu ; et fortuita :—in pestilentia, 43 in bello, in convivio. Latinorum quidam satis significari putaverunt, si illud generale tempus, hoc speciale tempora vocarent. Quorum utrorumque ratio et in consiliis quidem et in illo demonstrativo genere versatur, sed in iudiciis frequentissima est.
 44 Nam et iuris quaestiones facit et qualitatem distinguit et ad coniecturam plurimum confert : ut cum interim

¹ Met. xiii. 5. Ajax had saved the ships from being burned by the Trojans. The dispute as to whether the arms of Achilles should be awarded to him or to Ulysses is being tried there. Ajax's argument is, "Can you refuse me my due reward on the very spot where I saved you from disaster?"

QUINTILIAN

probationes inexpugnabiles adferat, quales sunt, si dicatur (ut supra posui) signator, qui ante diem tabularum decessit, aut commisisse aliquid, vel cum 45 infans esset vel cum omnino natus non esset; praeter id, quod omnia facile argumenta aut ex iis, quae ante rem facta sunt, aut ex coniunctis rei aut insequentibus ducuntur. Ex antecedentibus: Mortem minatus es, noctu existi, proficiscentem antecessisti; causae quo-
 46 que factorum praeteriti sunt temporis. Secundum tempus subtilius quidam, quam necesse erat, divisērunt, ut esset iuncti Sonus auditus est; adhaerentis Clamor sublatus est. Insequentis sunt illa Latuisti, profugisti, livores et tumores apparuerunt. Iisdem temporum gradibus defensor utetur ad detrahendam ei 47 quod obiicitur fidem. In his omnis factorum dictorumque ratio versatur, sed dupliciter. Nam fiunt quaedam quia aliud postea futurum est, quaedam quia aliud ante factum est: ut, cum obiicitur reo lenocinii, speciosae marito, quod adulterii damnatam quondam emerit; aut parricidii reo luxurioso, quod dixerit patri, Non amplius me obiurgabis. Nam et ille non

¹ v. v. 2.

² Both cases are clearly themes from the schools of rhetoric.

QUINTILIAN

quia emit leno est, sed quia leno erat emit; nec hic, quia sic erat locutus, occidit, sed, quia erat occisurus, 48 sic locutus est. Casus autem, qui et ipse praestat argumentis locum, sine dubio est ex insequentibus,
 sed quadam proprietate distinguitur, ut si dicam:
Melior dux Scipio quam Hannibal; vicit Hannibalem.
Bonus gubernator; nunquam fecit naufragium. Bonus agricola; magnos sustulit fructus. Et contra: Sumptuosus fuit; patrimonium exhaust. Turpiter vixit; 49 omnibus invisus est. Intuendae sunt praecipueque
 in coniecturis et facultates; credibilius est enim occisos a pluribus pauciores, a firmioribus imbecilliores, a vigilantibus dormientes, a praeparatis inopi-50 nantes; quorum contraria in diversum valent. Haec et in deliberando intuémur, et in iudiciis ad duas
 res solémus referre, an voluerit quis, an potuerit;
 nam et voluntatem spes facit. Hinc illa apud Cice-ronem coniectura, Insidiatus est Clodius Miloni, non Milo Clodio; ille cum servis robustis, hic cum mulierum comitatu, ille equis, hic in raeda, ille expeditus, hic pae-51 nula irretitus. Facultati autem licet instrumentum

¹ pro Mil. x. 29.

QUINTILIAN

- coniungere ; sunt enim in parte facultatis et copiae. Sed ex instrumento aliquando etiam signa nascuntur,
- 52 ut spiculum in corpore inventum. His adiicitur modus, quem τρόπον dicunt, quo quaeritur, quemadmodum quid sit factum. Idque tum ad qualitatem scriptumque pertinet, ut si negemus adulterum veneno licuisse occidere, tum ad coniecturas quoque, ut si dicam bona mente factum, ideo palam ; mala, ideo ex insidiis, nocte, in solitudine.
- 53 In rebus autem omnibus, de quarum vi ac natura quaeritur, quasque etiam citra complexum personarum ceterorumque ex quibus fit causa, per se intueri possumus, tria sine dubio rursus spectanda sunt, An sit, Quid sit, Quale sit. Sed, quia sunt quidam loci argumentorum omnibus communes, dividi haec tria genera non possunt, ideoque locis potius, ut in quos-
- 54 que incurrent, subiicienda sunt. Ducuntur ergo argumenta ex finitione seu fine ; nam utroque modo traditur. Eius duplex ratio est ; aut enim simpliciter quaeritur, sitne hoc virtus ; aut praecedente finitione, quid sit virtus. Id aut universum verbis complectimur, ut Rhetorice est bene dicendi scientia ; aut per partes, ut Rhetorice est inveniendi recte et disponendi et eloquendi cum firma memoria et cum dignitate actionis

¹ See § 40. Also III. v. 4, III. vi. 55 and 66.

² See above § 20.

QUINTILIAN

- 55 scientia. Praeterea finimus aut vi, sicut superiora, aut ἐνυμολογία, ut si assiduum ab asse¹ dando, et locupletem a locorum, pecuniosum a pecorum copia. Finitioni subiecta maxime videntur genus, species, 56 differens, proprium; ex iis omnibus argumenta ducuntur. Genus ad probandam speciem minimum valet, plurimum ad refellendam. Itaque non, quia est arbor, platanus est, at quod non est arbor, utique platanus non est; nec quod virtus est, utique iustitia est, at quod non est virtus, utique non potest esse iustitia.² Itaque a genere perveniendum ad ultimam speciem: ut Homo est animal non est satis, id enim genus est; mortale, etiamsi est species, cum aliis tamen communis finitio; rationale, nihil supererit ad demonstrandum id quod velis. 57 Contra species firmam probationem habet generis, infirmam refutationem. Nam, quod iustitia est, utique virtus est; quod non est iustitia, potest esse virtus, si est fortitudo, constantia, continentia. Nunquam itaque tollitur a specie genus, nisi ut omnes species, quae sunt generi subiectae, removeantur, hoc modo, Quod nec rationale nec mortale est neque animal,

¹ asse, Regius: aere, MSS.

² quod virtus . . . at, omitted by B: iustitia est . . . est virtus, omitted by A: the missing words are supplied by Victor.

¹ Paulus (exc. Fest.) gives the following explanation of this absurd derivation, for which Cicero tells that Aelius Stilo was responsible: "Some think that assiduus was originally

QUINTILIAN

- 58 *homo non est.*¹ His adiiciunt propria et differentia. Propriis confirmatur finitio, differentibus solvitur. Proprium autem est aut quod soli accidit, ut homini sermo, risus; aut quidquid utique accidit sed non soli, ut igni calfacere. Et sunt eiusdem rei plura propria, ut ipsius ignis lucere, calere. Itaque, quodcunque proprium deerit, solvit finitionem; non utique, quodcunque erit, confirmat. Saepissime autem, quid sit proprium cuiusque, quaeritur: ut, si per ἐτυμολογίαν dicatur, Tyrannicidae proprium est tyrannum occidere, negemus; non enim, si traditum sibi eum carnifex occiderit, tyrannicida dicatur, nec si
- 60 imprudens vel invitus. Quod autem proprium non erit, differens erit, ut aliud est servum esse aliud servire; qualis esse in addictis quaestio solet: Qui servus est, si manumittatur, fit libertinus, non item
- 61 addictus; et plura, de quibus alio loco. Illud quoque differens vocant, cum, genere in species diducto, species ipsa discernitur. Animal genus, mortale species, terrenum vel bipes differens; nondum enim

¹ quod neque immortale nec mortale est animal non est (and the like) MSS. : the text gives the conjecture of Halm.

¹ VII. iii. 26. Also III. vi. 25.

QUINTILIAN

proprium est sed iam differt a marino vel quadripede ;
 quod non tam ad argumentum pertinet quam ad 62 diligentem finitionis comprehensionem. Cicero genus et speciem, quam eandem formam vocat, a finitione deducit et iis, quae ad aliquid sunt, subiicit : ut, si
 is, cui argentum omne legatum est, petat signatum quoque, utatur genere ; at si quis, cum legatum sit ei, quae viro materfamilias esset, neget deberi ei, quae in manum non convenerit, specie ; quoniam 63 duae formae sint matrimoniorum. Divisione autem adiuvare finitionem docet, eamque differre a partitione, quod haec sit totius in partes, illa generis in formas ;
 partes incertas esse, ut Quibus constet respublica ;
 formas certas, ut Quot sint species rerumpubli-carum, quas tris accepimus, quae populi, quae pauco-64 rum, quae unius potestate regerentur. Et ille quidem non iis exemplis utitur, quia scribens ad Trebatium ex iure ducere ea maluit ; ego apertiora posui. Propria vero ad coniecturae quoque pertinent partem :
 ut, quia proprium est boni recte facere, iracundi
 verbis aut manu male facere, facta haec ab ipsis¹

¹ male facere, facta haec ab ipsis, supplied by Halm and Kayser.

¹ Cic. Top. iii. 13.

² There was the formal marriage per coemptionem, bringing the woman under the power (in manum) of her husband and giving her the title of materfamilias, and the informal marriage based on cohabitation without involving the wife's coming in manum mariti.

QUINTILIAN

esse credantur aut contra. Nam ut quaedam in quibusdam utique sunt, ita quaedam in quibusdam¹ utique non sunt: et ratio, quamvis sit ex diverso, eadem est.

- 65 Divisio et ad probandum simili via valet et ad refellendum. Probationi interim satis est unum habere, hoc modo, Ut sit civis, aut natus sit oportet aut factus; utrumque tollendum est, Nec natus nec factus
 66 est. Fit hoc et multiplex, idque est argumentorum genus ex remotione, quo modo efficitur totum falsum, modo id, quod relinquitur, verum. Totum falsum est hoc modo, Pecuniam credidisse te dicis; aut habuisti ipse aut ab aliquo accepisti aut invenisti aut surripuisti. Si neque domi habuisti neque ab aliquo accepisti et cetera,
 67 non credidisti. Reliquum fit verum sic, Hic servus, quem tibi vindicas, aut verna tuus est aut emptus aut donatus aut testamento relictus aut ex hoste captus aut alienus; deinde remotis prioribus supererit alienus. Periculosum et cum cura intuendum genus, quia, si in proponendo unum quodlibet omiserimus, cum risu
 68 quoque tota res solvitur. Tutius, quod Cicero pro Caecina facit, cum interrogat, Si haec actio non sit, quae sit? simul enim removentur omnia. Vel cum duo ponentur inter se contraria, quorum tenuisse

¹ utique sunt, ita quaedam in quibusdam, Julius Victor: omitted by MSS.

¹ pro Caec. xiii. 37.

QUINTILIAN

- utrumlibet sufficiat, quale Ciceronis est, Unum quidem certe, nemo erit tam inimicus Cluentio, qui mihi non concedat; si constet corruptum illud esse iudicium, aut ab Habito aut ab Oppianico esse corruptum; si doceo non ab Habito, vinco ab Oppianico; si ostendo ab Oppianico,
- 69 purgo Habitum. Fit etiam ex duobus, quorum necesse est alterum verum, eligendi adversario potestas, efficiturque, ut, utrum elegerit, noceat. Facit hoc Cicero pro Oppio: Utrum, cum Cottam appetisset, an cum ipse sese conaretur occidere, telum e manibus ereptum est? et pro Vareno: Optio vobis datur, utrum velitis casu illo itinere Varenum usum esse an huius persuasu et inductu. Deinde utraque facit accusatori contraria.
- 70 Interim duo ita proponuntur, ut utrumlibet electum idem efficiat, quale est, Philosophandum est, etiamsi non est philosophandum. Et illud vulgatum, Quo schema, si intelligitur? quo, si non intelligitur? Et, Mentietur in tormentis, qui dolorem pati potest; mentietur, qui non potest.
- 71 Ut sunt autem tria tempora, ita ordo rerum tribus momentis consertus est; habent enim omnia initium, incrementum, summam, ut iurgium deinde pugna,

¹ pro Cluent. xxiii. 64.

² Oppius was accused of embezzling public money and plotting against the life of M. Aurelius Cotta, governor of Bithynia, where Oppius was serving as quaestor. Cicero's defence of him is lost.

QUINTILIAN

- tum¹ caedes. Est ergo hic quoque argumentorum locus invicem probantium. Nam et ex initiis summa colligitur, quale est, Non possum togam praetextam sperare, cum exordium pullum videam; et contra, non dominationis causa Sullam arma sumpsisse, argumen-
- 72 tum est dictatura deposita. Similiter ex incremento in utramque partem ducitur rei ratio cum in coniectura tum etiam in tractatu aequitatis, an ad initium summa referenda sit, id est, an ei caedes imputanda sit, a quo iurgium coepit.
- 73 Est argumentorum locus ex similibus: Si continentia virtus, utique et abstinencia; Si fidem debet tutor, et procurator. Hoc est ex eo genere, quod ἐπαγωγή Graeci vocant, Cicero inductionem. Ex dissimilibus: Non, si laetitia bonum, et voluptas; Non, quod mulieri, idem pupillo. Ex contrariis: Frugalitas bonum, luxuria enim malum; Si malorum causa bellum est, erit emendatio pax; Si veniam meretur, qui imprudens nocuit, non
- 74 meretur praemium, qui imprudens profuit. Ex pugnantibus: Qui est sapiens, stultus non est. Ex consequentibus sive adiunctis: Si bonum iustitia, est recte iudi-

¹ pugna, tum, supplied by Halm.

¹ de Inv. i. 31.

² It is possible that Quintilian regards adiuncta as = consequentia. The distinction made above is that made by Cicero, Top. xii.

QUINTILIAN

candum ; Si malum perfidia, non est fallendum. Idem retro. Nec sunt his dissimilia ideoque huic loco subiicienda, cum et ipsa naturaliter congruant : Quod quis non habuit, non perdidit ; Quem quis amat, sciens non laedit ; Quem quis heredem suum esse voluit, carum habuit, habet, habebit. Sed cum sint indubitata, vim 75 habent paene signorum immutabilium. Sed haec consequentia dico, ἀκόλουθα ; est enim consequens sapientiae bonitas ; illa insequentia, παρεπόμενα, quae postea facta sunt aut futura. Nec sum de nominibus anxius ; vocet enim, ut voluerit quisque, dum vis rerum ipsa manifesta sit, appareatque hoc temporis, illud
76 *esse naturae. Itaque non dubito haec quoque vocare*¹ consequentia, quamvis ex prioribus dent argumentum ad ea quae sequuntur, quorum duas quidam species esse voluerunt : actionis, ut pro Oppio, Quos educere
invitos in provinciam non potuit, eos invitos retinere qui potuit ? temporis, in Verrem, Si finem praetoris edicto adferunt Kalendae Ian., cur non initium quoque edicti 77 nascatur a Kalendis Ian. ? Quod utrumque exemplum

¹ vocare, added by Spalding.

¹ See ch. ix.

² Verr. i. xlii. 109. The praetor on entering office on Jan. 1 issued an edict announcing the principles on which his rulings would be given. This edict was an interpretation of

QUINTILIAN

- tale est, ut idem in diversum, si retro agas, valeat. Consequens enim est, eos, qui inviti duci non 78 potuerint, invitos non potuisse retineri. Illa quoque, quae ex rebus mutuam confirmationem praestantibus ducuntur (quae proprii generis videri quidam volunt et vocant ἐκ τῶν πρὸς ἀλλήλα, Cicero ex rebus sub eandem rationem venientibus) fortiter consequentibus iunxerim: Si portorium Rhodiis locare honestum est, et Hermocreonti conducere, et 79 Quod discere honestum, et docere. Unde illa non hac ratione dicta sed efficiens idem Domitii Afri sententia est pulchra: Ego accusavi, vos damnastis. Est invicem consequens et quod ex diversis idem ostendit; ut, qui mundum nasci dicit, per hoc ipsum et deficere significet, quia deficit omne quod nascitur.
 80 Simillima est his argumentatio, qua colligi solent ex iis quae faciunt ea quae efficiuntur, aut contra, quod genus a causis vocant. Haec interim necessario fiunt, interim plerumque sed non necessario. Nam corpus in lumine utique umbram facit, et umbra, 81 ubicunque est, ibi esse corpus ostendit. Alia sunt, ut dixi, non necessaria, vel utrinque vel ex altera parte: Sol colorat; non utique, qui est coloratus, a sole

¹ Ar. Rhet. II. xxiii. 3.

² de Inv. I. xxx. 46. * ib. 47.

QUINTILIAN

est. Iter pulverulentum facit ; sed neque omne iter pulverem movet nec, quisquis est pulverulentus, ex itinere

- 82 est. Quae utique fiunt, talia sunt: Si sapientia bonum virum facit, bonus vir est utique sapiens; itemque Boni est honeste facere, mali turpiter ; et Qui honeste faciunt, boni, qui turpiter, mali iudicantur ; recte. At, Exercitatio plerumque robustum corpus facit ; sed non quisquis est robustus exercitatus, nec quisquis exercitatus robustus ; nec, quia fortitudo praestat ne mortem timeamus, quisquis mortem non timuerit, vir fortis erit existimandus ; nec, si capitis dolorem facit, inutilis hominibus
- 83 sol est. Haec ad hortativum maxime genus pertinent: Virtus facit laudem, sequenda igitur ; at voluptas infamiam, fugienda igitur. Recte autem monemur, causas non utique ab ultimo esse repetendas, ut
- 84 Medea, Utinam ne in nemore Pelio ; quasi vero id eam fecerit miseram aut nocentem, quod illic ceciderint abiegnae ad terram trabes ; et Philocteta Paridi, Si impar esses tibi, ego nunc non essem miser ; quo modo

¹ The opening of Ennius' translation of the Medea of Euripides.

² From the Philoctetes of Accius, Ribbeck fr. 178.

QUINTILIAN

- pervenire quolibet retro causas legentibus licet.
- 85 Illud his adicere ridiculum putarem, nisi eo Cicero uteretur, quod coniugatum vocant, ut eos, qui rem iustam faciunt, iuste facere (quod certe non eget probatione), quod compascuum est, compascere licere.
- 86 Quidam haec, quae vel ex causis vel ex efficientibus diximus, alieno nomine vocant ἐκβάσεις id est exitus. Nam nec hic aliud tractatur quam quid ex quoque eveniat.

- Adposita vel comparativa dicuntur, quae minora ex maioribus, maiora ex minoribus, paria ex paribus
- 87 probant. Confirmatur coniectura ex maiore, Si quis sacrilegium facit, faciet et furtum; ex minore, Qui facile ac palam mentitur, peierabit; ex pari, Qui ob rem iudicandam pecuniam accepit, et ob dicendum falsum
- 88 testimonium accipiet. Iuris confirmatio huiusmodi est: ex maiore, Si adulterum occidere licet, et loris caedere; ex minore, Si furem nocturnum occidere licet, quid latronem? ex pari, Quae poena adversus interfectorem patris iusta est, eadem adversus matris; quorum
- 89 omnium tractatus versatur in syllogismis. Illa magis

¹ Top. iii. 12.

² See III. vi. 15, 43, 88.

QUINTILIAN

finitionibus aut qualitatibus prosunt, *Si robur corporibus bonum est, non minus sanitas ; Si furtum scelus, magis sacrilegium ; Si abstinentia virtus, et continentia ; Si mundus providentia regitur, administranda respublica ; Si domus aedificari sine ratione non potest, quid urbs universa ? Si agenda est*¹ navaliū cura, et armorum.

- 90 Ac mihi quidem sufficeret hoc genus, sed in species secatur. Nam ex pluribus ad unum et ex uno ad plura (unde est Quod semel, et saepius), et ex parte ad totum et ex genere ad speciem, et ex eo quod continet ad id quod continetur, aut ex difficilioribus ad faciliora et ex longe positis ad propiora et ad omnia, quae contra haec sunt, eadem ratione argu-
- 91 menta ducuntur. Sunt enim et haec maiora et minora aut certe vim similem obtinent, quae si persequamur, nullus erit ea concidendi modus. Infinita est enim rerum comparatio, iucundiora, graviora, magis necessaria, honestiora, utiliora. Sed mittamus plura, ne in eam ipsam, quam vito,
- 92 loquacitatem incidam. Exemplorum quoque ad haec infinitus est numerus, sed paucissima attingam. Ex maiore pro Caecina, Quod exercitus armatos movet, id advocationem togatorum non videbitur movisse ? Ex fa-

¹ urbs universa ? si agenda est, Radermacher : agenda si, B : agendas, A.

¹ See iii. 6 passim.

² xv. 43.

QUINTILIAN

- ciliore in Clodium et Curionem, Ac vide, an facile fieri
 93 tu potueris, cum is factus non sit, cui tu concessisti. Ex
difficiliore, Vide quaeso, Tubero, ut, qui de meo facto non dubitem, de Ligarii audeam dicere. Et ibi, An sperandi Ligario causa non sit, cum mihi apud te locus sit etiam pro altero deprecandi? Ex minore pro Caecina, Itane scire esse armatos sal est, ut vim factam probes ;
 94 in manus eorum incidere non est satis? Ergo, ut breviter contraham summam, ducuntur argumenta a personis, causis, locis, tempore (cuius tres partes diximus, praecedens, coniunctum, insequens), facultatibus (quibus instrumentum subieciimus), modo (id est, ut quidque sit factum), finitione, genere, specie, differentibus, propriis, remotione, divisione, initio, incrementis, summa, similibus, dissimilibus, pugnantibus, consequentibus, efficientibus, effectis, eventis, com-paratione, quae in plures diducitur species.
 95 Illud adiiciendum videtur, duci argumenta non a confessis tantum sed etiam a fictione, quod Graeci
 καθ' ὑπόθεσιν vocant; et quidem ex omnibus iisdem

¹ A lost speech of Cicero, to which reference is made in III. vii. 2.

² pro Lig. iii. 8 and x. 31. Cicero's point is that he has been a much more bitter opponent of Caesar than Ligarius, and yet he has been pardoned while Ligarius has not.

³ xvi. 45. Caecina had attempted to take possession of lands left him by will, but was driven off by armed force. Cicero has just pointed out that there were precedents for locis, quibus superiora, quia totidem species esse pos-96 sunt fictæ quot veræ. Nam fingere hoc loco hoc est proponere aliquid, quod, si verum sit, aut solvat quaestionem aut adiuvet; deinde id, de quo quæ-ritur, facere illi simile. Id quo facilius accipiant iuvenes nondum scholam egressi, primo familiaribus 97 magis ei ætati exemplis ostendam. Lex: Qui paren-tes non aluerit, vinciatur. Non alit aliquis, et vincula nihilominus recusat. Utitur fictione, si miles, si in-fans sit, si reipublicæ causa absit. Et illa contra optionem fortium, si tyrannidem petas, si templorum 98 eversionem. Plurimum ea res virium habet contra scriptum. Utitur his Cicero pro Caecina, unde tu aut familia aut procurator tuus. Si me villicus tuus solus deiecisset—Si vero ne habeas quidem servum præ-ter eum, qui me deiecerit, et alia in eodem libro plurima.

QUINTILIAN

99 Verum eadem fictio valet et ad qualitates: Si Catilina

¹ cp. VII. v. 4.

² xix. 55. Quintilian merely quotes fragments of Cicero's arguments. The sense of the passages omitted is supplied in brackets. The interdict of the prætor had ordered Caecina's restoration. His adversary is represented by Cicero as attempting to evade compliance by verbal quibbles.

³ pro Mur. xxxix. 83. Cicero argues that Murena's election as consul is necessary to save the state from Catiline. If the jury now condemn him, they will be doing exactly what Catiline and his accomplices, now in arms in Etruria, would do if they could try him.

QUINTILIAN

cum suo consilio nefariorum hominum, quos secum eduxit, hac de re posset iudicare, condemnaret L. Murenam; et ad amplificationem: Si hoc tibi inter cenam in illis immanibus poculis tuis accidisset. Sic et, Si respublica vocem haberet.

- 100 Has fere sedes accepimus probationum in universum, quas neque generatim tradere sat est, cum ex qualibet earum innumerabilis argumentorum copia oriatur, neque per singulas species exsequi patitur natura rerum, quod qui sunt facere conati, duo pariter subierunt incommoda, ut et nimium dicerent nec
- 101 tamen totum. Inde plurimi, cum in hos inexplicabiles laqueos inciderunt, omnem, etiam quem ex ingenio suo poterant habere, conatum velut adstricti certis legum vinculis perdiderunt, et magistrum
- 102 respicientes naturam ducem sequi desierunt. Nam ut per se non sufficiet scire, omnes probationes aut a personis aut a rebus peti, quia utrumque in plura dividitur, ita ex antecedentibus et iunctis et insequentibus trahenda esse argumenta qui acceperit, num protinus in hoc sit instructus ut, quid in quaque
- 103 causa ducendum sit ex his, sciat? praesertim, cum plurimae probationes in ipso causarum complexu

¹ Phil. II. xxv. 63. "This" = vomiting. Cicero continues "who would not have thought it disgraceful."

² Probably an allusion to Cat. i. 7, where Cicero makes the state reproach Catiline for his conduct.

QUINTILIAN

reperiantur, ita ut sint cum alia lite nulla communes, eaeque sint et potentissimae et minime obviae, quia communia ex praeceptis accepimus, propria inveni-104 enda sunt. Hoc genus argumentorum sane dicamus ex circumstantia, quia περίστασις dicere aliter non possumus, vel ex iis quae cuiusque causae propria sunt: ut in illo adultero sacerdote, qui lege, qua unius servandi potestatem habebat, se ipse servare voluit, proprium controversiae est dicere, Non unum nocentem servabas, quia te dimisso adulteram occidere non licebat. Hoc enim argumentum lex facit, quae 105 prohibet adulteram sine adultero occidere. Et illa, in qua lata lex est, ut argentarii dimidium ex eo quod debebant solverent, creditum suum totum exigerent. Argentarius ab argentario solidum petit. Proprium ex materia est argumentum creditoris, idcirco adiectum esse in lege, ut argentarius totum exigeret; adversus alios enim non opus fuisse lege, cum omnes praeterquam ab argentariis totum exi-
 106 gendi ius haberent. Cum multa autem novantur in omni genere materiae tum praecipue in iis quaestio-

¹ This law and those which follow are imaginary laws invented for the purposes of the schools of rhetoric.

² The argument is far from clear. The case assumes that by a species of moratorium a banker may be released from payment of his debts in full to ordinary creditors. This moratorium does not however apparently apply to debts contracted between banker and banker.

QUINTILIAN

nibus, quae scripto constant, quia vocum est in singulis ambiguitas frequens et adhuc in coniunctis 107 magis. Et haec ipsa plurium legum aliorumve scriptorum vel congruentium vel repugnantium complexu varientur necesse est, cum res rei aut ius iuris quasi signum est. Non debui tibi pecuniam; nunquam me appellasti, usuram non accepisti, ultro a me mutuatus es. Lex est, Qui patri prodicionis reo non adfuerit, exheres sit. Negat filius,¹ nisi si pater absolutus sit. Quid signi? Lex altera, Prodicionis damnatus cum advocato
 108 exulet. Cicero pro Cluentio Publium Popilium et Tiberium Guttam dicit non iudicii corrupti sed ambitus esse damnatos. Quid signi? quod accusatores eorum, qui erant ipsi ambitus damnati, e lege sint 109 post hanc victoriam restituti. Nec minus in hoc curae debet adhiberi, quid proponendum quam quomodo sit quod proposuerimus probandum. Hic immo vis inventionis, si non maior, certe prior. Nam ut tela supervacua sunt nescienti, quid petat, sic argumenta, nisi provideris cui rei adhibenda sint.
 110 Hoc est, quod comprehendi arte non possit. Ideo-

¹ filius, Spalding: fit, MSS.

¹ xxxvi. 98. The lex Iulia de ambitu contained a provision that the penalty (loss of civil rights) incurred by conviction for ambitus should be annulled if the condemned man could secure the conviction of another person for the same offence.

QUINTILIAN

que, cum plures eadem didicerint, generibus argumentorum similibus utentur; alius alio plura, quibus utatur, inveniet. Sit exempli gratia proposita controversia, quae communes minime cum aliis quaestiones habet: Cum Thebas evertisset Alexander, invenit tabulas, quibus centum talenta mutua Thessalis dedisse Thebanos continebatur. Has, quia erat usus commilitio Thessalorum, donavit his ultro; postea restituti a Casandro Thebani reposcunt Thessalos. Apud Amphictyonas agitur. Centum talenta et credidisse eos 112 constat et non recepisse. Lis omnis ex eo, quod Alexander ea Thessalis donasse dicitur, pendet. Constat illud quoque, non esse iis ab Alexandro pecuniam datam; quaeritur ergo, an proinde sit, 113 quod datum est, ac si pecuniam dederit? Quid proderunt argumentorum loci, nisi haec prius videro, nihil eum egisse donando, non potuisse donare, non donasse? Et prima quidem actio facilis ac favorabilis repetentium iure quod vi sit ablatum; sed hinc aspera et vehemens quaestio exoritur de iure belli, dicentibus Thessalis, hoc regna, populos, fines gen-114 tium atque urbium contineri. Inveniendum contra

QUINTILIAN

est, quo distet haec causa a ceteris, quae in potestatem victoris venirent; nec circa probationem res haeret, sed circa propositionem. Dicamus inprimis: in eo, quod in iudicium deduci potest, nihil valere ius belli nec armis erepta nisi armis posse retineri; itaque, ubi illa valeant, non esse iudicem; ubi iudex 115 sit, illa nihil valere. Hoc inveniendum est, ut adhiberi possit argumentum: ideo captivos,¹ si in patriam suam redierint, liberos esse, quia bello parta nonnisi eadem vi possideantur. Proprium est et illud causae, quod Amphictyones iudicant (ut alia apud centum-116 tionibus ratio); tum secundo gradu, non potuisse donari a victore ius, quia id demum sit eius, quod teneat; ius, quod sit incorporale, adprehendi manu non posse. Hoc reperire est difficilius quam, cum inveneris, argumentis adiuvere, ut alia sit condicio heredis, alia victoris, quia ad illum ius, ad hunc res
117 transeat. Proprium deinde materiae, ius publici

¹ cp. § 118. The Amphictyonic Council of Delphi in the fourth century B.C. had come to be an international council, in which the great majority of the states of Greece were represented.

² i. e. a right can only be transferred by the possessor, not by force or seizure.

QUINTILIAN

crediti transire ad victorem non potuisse, quia, quod populus crediderit, omnibus debeatur, et, quamdiu quolibet unus superfuerit, esse eum totius summae creditorem, Thebanos autem non omnes in Alex-118 andri manu fuisse. Hoc non extrinsecus probatur, quae vis est argumenti, sed ipsum per se valet.
Tertii loci pars prior magis vulgaris, non in tabulis
esse ius; itaque multis argumentis defendi potest.
Mens quoque Alexandri duci debet in dubium, honorarit eos an deceperit. Illud iam rursus proprium materiae et velut novae controversiae, quia restitu-tione recepisse ius, etiamsi quod amiserint, Thebani videntur. Hic et, quid Cassander velit, quaeritur;
sed vel potentissima apud Amphictyonas aequi tractatio est.

119 Haec non idcirco dico, quod inutilem horum loco-rum, ex quibus argumenta ducuntur, cognitionem putem, alioqui nec tradidissem; sed ne se, qui cog-noverint ista, si cetera negligant, perfectos protinus
atque consummatos putent et, nisi in ceteris, quae

¹ See v. x. 20.

QUINTILIAN

mox praecienda sunt, elaboraverint, mutam quan-120 dam scientiam consecutos intelligant. Neque enim artibus editis factum est, ut argumenta inveniremus, sed dicta sunt omnia, antequam praeciperentur, mox ea scriptores observata et collecta ediderunt. Cuius rei probatio est, quod exemplis eorum veteribus
utuntur et ab oratoribus illa repetunt, ipsi nullum 121 novum et quod dictum non sit inveniunt. Artifices ergo illi qui dixerunt; sed habenda his quoque gratia est, per quos labor nobis est detractus. Nam, quae priores beneficio ingenii singula invenerunt,
nobis et non sunt requirenda et notata¹ sunt omnia.
Sed non magis hoc sat est quam palaestram didicisse, nisi corpus exercitatione, continentia, cibis, ante omnia natura iuvatur, sicut contra ne illa qui-122 dem satis sine arte profuerint. Illud quoque studiosi eloquentiae cogitent, neque omnibus in causis, quae demonstravimus, cuncta posse reperiri; neque, cum proposita fuerit materia dicendi, scrutanda singula et velut ostiatim pulsandum,² ut sciant, an ad probandum id, quod intendimus, forte respondeant, nisi 123 cum discunt et adhuc usu carent. Infinitam enim faciat ista res dicendi tarditatem, si semper necesse

¹ notata, Guelferbytanus: notat, B: notant, A.

² pulsandum, Francius: pulsanda, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

sit, ut temptantes unumquodque eorum, quod sit aptum atque conveniens, experiendo noscamus; nescio an etiam impedimento futura sint, nisi et animi quaedam ingenita natura et studio exercitata velocitas recta nos ad ea, quae conveniunt causae, ferant.

- 124 Nam, ut cantus vocis plurimum iuvat sociata nervorum concordia, si tamen tardior manus nisi inspectis demensisque singulis, quibus quaeque vox fidibus iungenda sit, dubitet, potius fuerit esse contentum eo, quod simplex canendi natura tulerit, ita huiusmodi praeceptis debet quidem aptata esse et citharae
- 125 modo intenta ratio doctrinae; sed hoc exercitatione multa consequendum, ut, quemadmodum illorum artificum, etiamsi alio spectant, manus tamen ipsa consuetudine ad graves, acutos, medios nervorum¹ sonos fertur, sic oratoris cognitionem nihil moretur haec varietas argumentorum et copia, sed quasi offerat se et occurrat, et, ut litterae syllabaeque scribentium cogitationem non exigunt, sic rationem sponte quadam sequantur.

. XI. Tertium genus ex iis, quae extrinsecus adducuntur in causam, Graeci vocant παράδειγμα, quo nomine et generaliter usi sunt in omni similium adpositione et specialiter in iis, quae rerum gestarum auctoritate nituntur. Nostri fere similitudinem vocari maluerunt, quod ab illis παραβολή dicitur, alterum exemplum, quanquam et hoc simile est et illud

¹ nervorum, Gertz : horum, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

- 2 exemplum. Nos, quo facilius propositum explicemus, utrumque παράδειγμα esse credamus, et ipsi appellemus exemplum. Nec vereor, ne videar repugnare Ciceroni, quanquam collationem separat ab exemplo. Nam idem omnem argumentationem dividit in duas partes, inductionem et ratiocinationem, ut plerique Graecorum in παραδείγματα et ἐπιχειρήματα, dixerunt-
- 3 que παράδειγμα ῥητορικὴν ἐπαγωγὴν. Nam illa, qua plurimum est Socrates usus, hanc habuit viam, ut cum plura interrogasset, quae fateri adversario necesse esset, novissime id, de quo quaerebatur, inferret, ut simile concessis.¹ Id est inductio. Hoc in oratione fieri non potest; sed, quod illic interrogatur, hic
- 4 fere sumitur. Sit igitur illa interrogatio talis: Quod est pomum generosissimum? nonne quod optimum? concedetur. Quid equus? qui generosissimus? Nonne qui optimus? et plura in eundem modum. Deinde, cuius rei gratia rogatum est, Quid homo? Nonne is generosissimus, qui optimus? fatendum erit. Hoc in testium interrogatione valet plurimum, in oratione perpetua dissimile est; aut enim sibi ipse respondet orator aut quod illic interrogatur, hic fere sumitur.² Quod

¹ concessis, Törnebladh: concessisse, MSS.

² aut quod . . . sumitur, supplied by Meister. Some such phrase must have been lost, but there can be no certainty either as regards the exact words or their precise place.

QUINTILIAN

pomum generosissimum? puto, quod optimum; et equus? qui velocissimus: ita hominum, non qui claritate nascendi sed qui virtute maxime excellat.

- Omnia igitur ex hoc genere sumpta necesse est aut similia esse aut dissimilia aut contraria. Similitudo adsumitur interim et ad orationis ornatum; sed illa, cum res exiget, nunc ea, quae ad probationem
- 6 pertinent, exsequar. Potentissimum autem est inter ea quae sunt huius generis, quod proprie vocamus exemplum, id est rei gestae aut ut gestae utilis ad persuadendum id quod intenderis commemoratio. Intuendum igitur est, totum simile sit an ex parte, ut aut omnia ex eo sumamus aut quae utilia sunt. Simile est, Iure occisus est Saturninus sicut Gracchi.
- 7 Dissimile, Brutus occidit liberos proditorem molientes; Manlius virtutem filii morte multavit. Contrarium, Marcellus ornamenta Syracusanis hostibus restituit; Verres eadem sociis abstulit. Et probandorum et culpandorum ex iis confirmatio eosdem gradus habet.
- 8 Etiam in iis, quae futura dicemus, utilis similitum admonitio est, ut si quis dicens, Dionysium idcirco petere custodes salutis suae, ut eorum adiutus armis

¹ VIII. iii. 72 sqq.

² Manlius had forbidden all encounters with the enemy. His son engaged in single combat and slew his man. See Liv. VIII. vii. 1.

³ cp. Verr. IV. iv. 123.

QUINTILIAN

tyrannidem occupet, hoc referat exemplum, eadem ratione Pisistratum ad dominationem pervenisse.

- 9 Sed ut sunt exempla interim tota similia ut hoc proximum, sic interim ex maioribus ad minora, ex minoribus ad maiora ducuntur. Urbes violata propter matrimonia eversae sunt; quid fieri adultero par est? Tibicines, cum ab urbe discessissent, publice revocati sunt; quanto magis principes civitatis viri et bene de republica
- 10 meriti, cum invidiae cesserint, ab exilio reducendi? Ad exhortationem vero praecipue valent imparia. Admirabilior in femina quam in viro virtus. Quare, si ad fortiter faciendum accendatur aliquis, non tantum adferent momenti Horatius et Torquatus quantum illa mulier cuius manu Pyrrhus est interfectus, et ad moriendum non tam Cato et Scipio quam Lucretia;
- 11 quod ipsum est ex maioribus ad minora. Singula igitur horum generum ex Cicerone (nam unde potius?) exempla ponamus. Simile est hoc pro Murena, Etenim mihi ipsi accidit, ut cum duobus patriciis, altero improbissimo et audacissimo altero modestissimo atque optimo viro, peterem; superavi tamen dignitate Catilinam,

¹ cp. Liv. ix. 30. The flute-players employed in public worship migrated to Tibur because deprived of an old-established privilege, but were brought back by stratagem, after their hosts had made them drunk.

² viii. 17. Sulpicius, one of Murena's accusers and an unsuccessful candidate for the consulship, had sought to depreciate Murena's birth. Cicero urges that even if Sulpicius' statements were true they would be irrelevant and cites his own case to support his argument.

QUINTILIAN

- 12 gratia Galbam. Maius minoris, pro Milone, Negant intueri lucem esse fas ei qui a se hominem occisum esse fateatur. In qua tandem urbe hoc homines stultissimi disputant? nempe in ea quae primum iudicium de capite vidit M. Horatii, fortissimi viri, qui nondum libera civitate tamen populi Romani comitiis liberatus est, cum sua manu sororem esse interfectam fateretur. Minus maioris: Occidi, occidi, non Spurium Maelium, qui annona levandu iacturisque rei familiaris, quia nimis amplecti plebem videbatur, in suspicionem incidit regni adfectandi, et cetera, deinde, Sed eum (auderet enim dicere, cum patriam periculo liberasset) cuius nefandum adulterium in pulvinaribus, et totus in Clodium locus.
- 13 Dissimile plures causas habet, fit enim genere, modo, tempore, loco, ceteris, per quae fere omnia Cicero praeiudicia, quae de Cluentio videbantur facta, subvertit; contrario vero exemplo censoriam notam laudando censorem Africanum, qui eum, quem peierasse conceptis verbis palam dixisset, testimonium etiam pollicitus, si quis contra diceret, nullo accu-

¹ iii. 7. ² pro Mil. xxvii. 72.

³ pro Cluent. xxxii. sqq.

⁴ ib. xlviii. 134. The accused was a knight: the retention of his horse implied that he retained his status.

QUINTILIAN

sante, traducere equum passus esset ; quae, quia erant
 14 longiora, non suis verbis exposui. Breve autem apud
 Vergilium contrarii exemplum est :

At non ille, satum quod te mentiris, Achilles Talis in hoste fuit Priamo.

- 15 Quaedam autem ex iis, quae gesta sunt, tota narra-bimus, ut Cicero pro Milone : *Pudicitiam cum eriperet militi tribunus militaris in exercitu C. Marii, propinquus eius imperatoris, interfectus ab eo est, cui vim adferebat.
 Facere enim probus adolescens periculose quam perpeti
 turpiter maluit ; atque hunc ille summus vir scelere solutum*
 16 periculo liberavit. Quaedam significare satis erit, ut
 idem ac pro eodem : Neque enim posset Ahala ille Servilius aut P. Nasica aut L. Opimius aut me consule senatus non nefarius haberi, si sceleratos interfici nefas esset. Haec ita dicuntur, prout nota erunt vel utilitas causae aut decor postulabit.
- 17 Eadem ratio est eorum, quae ex poeticis fabulis ducuntur, nisi quod iis minus adfirmationis adhibetur ;
 cuius usus qualis esse deberet, idem optimus auctor 18 ac magister eloquentiae ostendit. Nam huius quo-que generis in eadem oratione reperietur exemplum :
Itaque hoc, iudices, non sine causa etiam fictis fabulis

¹ Aen. ii. 540.

² pro Mil. iv. 9.

³ ib. iii. 8.

⁴ ib. iii. 8. The allusion is to Orestes, acquitted when tried before the Areopagus at Athens by the casting vote of Pallas Athene.

QUINTILIAN

- doctissimi homines memoriae prodiderunt, eum, qui patris ulciscendi causa matrem necavisset, variatis hominum sententiis, non solum divina sed sapientissimae deae sententia*
- 19 liberatum. Illae quoque fabellae, quae, etiamsi originem non ab Aesopo acceperunt (nam videtur earum primus auctor Hesiodus), nomine tamen Aesopi maxime celebrantur, ducere animos solent praecipue rusticorum et imperitorum, qui et simplicius, quae ficta sunt, audiunt, et capti voluptate facile iis quibus delectantur consentiunt: siquidem et Menenius Agrippa plebem cum patribus in gratiam traditur reduxisse nota illa de membris humanis adversus
- 20 ventrem discordantibus fabula. Et Horatius ne in poemate quidem humilem generis huius usum putavit in illis versibus, Quod dixit vulpes aegroto cauta leoni. Αἴνον Graeci vocant et αἰσωπέλους, ut dixi, λόγους et λιβυκοὺς; nostrorum quidam, non sane recepto in
- 21 usum nomine, apologationem. Cui confine est παροιμία genus illud, quod est velut fabella brevior et per allegorian accipitur: Non nostrum inquit onus; hos clitellas.
- 22 Proximas exempli vires habet similitudo, praecipue illa, quae ducitur citra ullam translationum mixturam ex rebus paene paribus: Ut, qui accipere in Campo consuerunt, iis candidatis, quorum nummos suppressos esse putant, inimicissimi solent esse, sic eiusmodi iudices infesti

¹ See Liv. ii. 32.

² Epist. i. i. 73.

³ In the preceding section. cp. Arist. Rhet. ii. xx. 3 for "Libyan stories."

QUINTILIAN

- 23 tum reo venerunt. Nam παραβολή, quam Cicero collationem vocat, longius res quae comparentur repetere solet. Neque hominum modo inter se opera similia spectantur, ut Cicero pro Murena facit: Quodsi e portu solventibus, qui iam in portum ex alto invehuntur, praecipere summo studio solent et tempestatum rationem et praedonum et locorum (quod natura adfert, ut iis faveamus, qui eadem pericula, quibus nos perfuncti sumus, ingrediantur), quo me tandem animo esse oportet, prope iam ex magna iactatione terram videntem, in hunc, cui video maximas tempestates esse subeundas? sed et a mutis atque etiam inanimis interim simile¹ huius-
- 24 modi ducitur. Et quoniam similium alia facies in alia ratione, admonendum est rarius esse in oratione illud genus, quod εἰκόνα Graeci vocant (quo exprimitur rerum aut personarum imago, ut Cassius: Quis istam faciem lanipedis senis torquens?) quam id, quo probabilius fit quod intendimus: ut, si animum dicas excolendum, similitudine utaris terrae, quae neglecta spinas ac dumos, culta fructus creat; aut si ad curam

¹ simile, added by Halm.

¹ pro Cluent. xxvii. 75. ² de Inv. i. 30. ³ ii. 4.

⁴ Probably the epigrammatist Cassius of Parma. lanipedis = bandaged for the gout. Regius emended to planipedis, a dancer who performed barefoot.

QUINTILIAN

rei publicae horteris, ostendas apes etiam formicasque, non modo muta, sed etiam parva animalia, in commune
 25 tamen laborare. Ex hoc genere dictum illud est Ciceronis: Ut corpora nostra sine mente, ita civitas sine lege suis partibus, ut nervis ac sanguine et membris, uti non potest. Sed ut hac corporis humani pro Cluentio, ita pro Cornelio equorum, pro Archia saxorum quoque
 26 usus est similitudine. Illa (ut dixi) propiora: ut remiges sine gubernatore, sic milites sine imperatore nihil valere. Solent tamen fallere similitudinum species, ideoque adhibendum est iis iudicium. Neque enim, ut navis utilior nova quam vetus, sic amicitia; vel, ut laudanda, quae pecuniam suam pluribus largitur, ita, quae formam. Verba sunt in his similia vetustatis et largitionis, vis quidem longe diversa navis et amicitiae,¹
 27 pecuniae et pudicitiae. Itaque in hoc genere maxime quaeritur, an simile sit, quod infertur. Etiam in illis interrogationibus Socratis, quarum paulo ante feci mentionem, cavendum, ne incaute respondeas; ut apud Aeschinen Socraticum male respondit Aspasiae Xenophontis uxor, quod Cicero his verbis transfert:
 28 Dic mihi, quaeso, Xenophontis uxor, si vicina tua melius

¹ navis et amicitiae, added by Spalding.

¹ pro Cluent. liii. 146.

² pro Arch. viii. 19.

³ de Inv. i. xxxi. 51.

² See iv. iv. 8.

⁴ § 3.

- habeat aurum, quam tu habes : utrumne illud an tuum malis ? Illud, inquit. Quid si vestem et ceterum ornatum muliebrem pretii maioris habeat, quam tu, tuumne an illius malis ? Respondit, Illius vero. Age sis, inquit, si virum illa meliorem habeat, quam tu habes,*
- 29 utrumne tuum virum malis an illius ? Hic mulier erubuit, merito ; male enim responderat se malle alienum aurum quam suum ; nam est hoc improbum. At, si respondisset malle se aurum suum tale esse, quale illud esset, potuisset pudice respondere malle se virum suum talem esse, qualis melior esset.
- 30 Scio quosdam inani diligentia per minutissimas ista partes secuisse, et esse aliquid minus simile, ut simia homini et marmora deformata prima manu, aliquid plus, ut illud, Non ovum tam simile ovo ; et dissimilibus inesse simile, ut formicae et elephanto genus, quia sunt animalia ; et similibus dissimile, ut canibus catulos et matribus haedos, differunt enim aetate ;
- 31 contrariorum quoque aliter accipi opposita, ut noctem luci, aliter noxia, ut aquam frigidam feбри, aliter repugnantia, ut verum falso, aliter disparata, ut dura non duris ; sed, quid haec ad praesens propositum magnopere pertineant, non reperiо.

¹ Verg. Ecl. i. 23.

QUINTILIAN

- 32 Illud est adnotandum magis, argumenta duci ex iure simili: ut Cicero in Topicis, Eum, cui domus usus fructus relictus sit, non restitutum heredem, si corruerit, quia non restituat servum, si is decesserit; ex contrario: Nihil obstat quo minus iustum matrimonium sit mente coeuntium, etiamsi tabulae signatae non fuerint. Nihil enim proderit signasse tabulas, si mentem matrimonii non fuisse constabit; ex dissimili, quale est Ciceronis pro
- 33 Caecina: Ut, si qui me exire domo coegisset armis, haberem actionem, si qui introire prohibuisset, non haberem? Dissimilia sic deprehenduntur, Non si, qui argentum omne legavit, videri potest signatam quoque pecuniam reliquisse, ideo etiam, quod est in nominibus, dari voluisse creditur.
- 34 'Αναλογίαν quidam a simili separaverunt, nos eam subiectam huic generi putamus. Nam, ut unum ad decem, ita¹ decem ad centum simile certe est; et ut hostis, sic malus civis. Quanquam haec ulterius quoque procedere solent: si turpis dominae consuetudo

¹ ita, Spalding: et, MSS.

¹ iii. 15. ² xii. 34.

² cp. Cic. Top. iii. 13 and 16.

QUINTILIAN

cum servo, turpis domino cum ancilla ; si mutis animalibus finis voluptas, idem homini. Cui rei facillime occurrit ex dissimilibus argumentatio : Non idem est dominum cum ancilla coisse, quod dominam cum servo ; nec, si mutis finis voluptas, rationalibus quoque ; immo ex contrario : Quia mutis, ideo non rationalibus.

36 Adhibebitur extrinsecus in causam et auctoritas. Haec secuti Graecos, a quibus κρίσεις dicuntur, iudicia aut iudicationes vocant, non de quibus ex causa dicta sententia est (nam ea quidem in exemplorum locum cedunt), sed si quid ita visum gentibus, populis, sapientibus viris, claris civibus, illustribus poetis
37 referri potest. Ne haec quidem vulgo dicta et recepta persuasione populari sine usu fuerint. Testimonia sunt enim quodammodo vel potentiora etiam, quod non causis accommodata, sed liberis odio et gratia mentibus ideo tantum dicta factaque, quia aut hon-
38 estissima aut verissima videbantur. An vero me de incommodis vitae disserentem non adiuvabit earum persuasio nationum, quae fletibus natos, laetitia de-

QUINTILIAN

- functos prosequuntur? Aut si misericordiam commendabo iudici, nihil proderit, quod prudentissima civitas Atheniensium non eam pro adfectu sed pro numine accepit? Iam illa septem praecepta sapientium nonne quasdam vitae leges existimamus? Si causam beneficii dicat adultera, non M. Catonis iudicio damnata videatur, qui nullam adulteram non eandem esse veneficam dixit? Nam sententiis quidem poetarum non orationes modo sunt refertae sed libri etiam philosophorum, qui quanquam inferiora omnia praeceptis suis ac litteris credunt, repetere tamen auctoritatem a plurimis versibus non fastidierunt. Neque est ignobile exemplum, Megarios ab Atheniensibus, cum de Salamine contenderent, victos Homeri versu, qui tamen ipse non in omni editione reperitur, significans Aiace[m] naves suas Atheniensibus iunxisse.
- 41 Ea quoque, quae vulgo recepta sunt, hoc ipso, quod incertum auctorem habent, velut omnium fiunt: quale est, Ubi amici, ibi opes, et, Conscientia mille testes, et apud Ciceronem, Pares aule[m] (ut est in vetere proverbio) cum paribus maxime congregantur; neque enim durassent haec in aeternum, nisi vera omnibus viderentur.
- 42 Ponitur a quibusdam et quidem in parte prima deorum auctoritas, quae est ex responsis, ut, Socraten

¹ Il. ii. 558. "Twelve ships great Ajax brought from Salamis, And ranged them where the Athenian army stood."

² Cato maj. iii. 7.

QUINTILIAN

- esse sapientissimum.* Id rarum est, non sine usu tamen.
- Utitur eo Cicero in libro de aruspicum responsis et in contione contra Catilinam, cum signum Iovis columnae impositum populo ostendit, et pro Ligario, cum causam C. Caesaris meliorem, quia hoc dii iudicaverint, confitetur. Quae cum propria causae sunt, divina testimonia vocantur; cum aliunde arcessuntur, argumenta.
 - 43 Nonnunquam contingit iudicis quoque aut adversarii aut eius, qui ex diverso agit, dictum aliquid aut factum adsumere ad eorum, quae intendimus, fidem. Propter quod fuerunt, qui exempla et has auctoritates inartificialium probationum esse arbitrarentur,
 - 44 quod ea non inveniret orator, sed acciperet. Plurimum autem refert. Nam testis et quaestio et his similia de ipsa re, quae in iudicio est, pronuntiant; extra petita, nisi ad aliquam praesentis disceptationis utilitatem ingenio applicantur, nihil per se valent.

XII. Haec fere de probatione vel ab aliis tradita vel usu percepta in hoc tempus sciebam. Neque mihi fiducia est, ut ea sola esse contendam, quin immo hortor ad quaerendum et inveniri posse fateor; quae tamen adiecta fuerint, non multum ab his ¹ de har. resp. passim. The soothsayers consulted as to the significance of certain prodigies had replied that they were due to the profanation of sacred rites. Clodius interpreted this as referring to the rebuilding of Cicero's house. Cicero argued against this in a speech to the senate (56 B.C.).

² in Cat. III. ix. 21.

³ vi. 19.

QUINTILIAN

abhorrebunt. Nunc breviter, quemadmodum sit utendum iis, subiungam.

- 2 Traditum fere est argumentum oportere esse confessum; dubiis enim probari dubia qui possunt? Quaedam tamen, quae in alterius rei probationem ducimus, ipsa probanda sunt. Occidisti virum, eras enim adultera. Prius de adulterio convincendum est ut, cum id coeperit esse pro certo, fiat incerti argumentum. Spiculum tuum in corpore occisi inventum est; negat suum: ut probationi prosit, probandum est.
- 3 Illud hoc loco monere inter necessaria est, nulla esse firmitiora quam quae ex dubiis facta sunt certa. Caedes a te commissae est, cruentam enim vestem habuisti; non est tam grave argumentum, si fatetur quam si vincitur. Nam si fatetur, multis ex causis potuit cruenta esse vestis; si negat, hic causae cardinem ponit, in quo si victus fuerit, etiam in sequentibus ruit. Non enim videtur in negando mentiturus fuisse, nisi desperasset id posse defendi, si confiteretur.
- 4 Firmissimis argumentorum singulis instandum, infirmiora congreganda sunt, quia illa per se fortia non oportet circumstantibus obscurare, ut qualia sunt

¹ cp. v. xi. 39.

QUINTILIAN

appareant, haec imbecilla natura mutuo auxilio
5 sustinentur. Ita quae non possunt valere, quia magna sint, valebunt, quia multa sunt; utique vero ad eiusdem rei probationem omnia spectant. Ut, si quis hereditatis gratia hominem occidisse dicatur: Hereditatem sperabas et magnum hereditatem, et pauper eras et tum maxime a creditoribus appellaberis; et offenderas eum, cuius eras heres, et mutaturum tabulas sciebas. Singula levia sunt et communia, universa vero nocent etiamsi non ut fulmine, tamen ut grandine.

6 Quaedam argumenta ponere satis non est, adiuvanda sunt: cupiditas causa sceleris fuit, quae sit vis eius: ira, quantum efficiat in animis hominum talis adfectio; ita et firmiora erunt ipsa et plus habebunt
decoris, si non nudos et velut carne spoliatos artus
7 ostenderint. Multum etiam refert, si argumento nitemur odii, utrum hoc ex invidia sit an ex iniuria
an ex ambitu, vetus an novum, adversus inferiorem, 300.

QUINTILIAN

- parem, superiorem, alienum, propinquum. Suos habent omnia ista tractatus et ad utilitatem partis 8 eius quam tuemur referenda sunt. Nec tamen omnibus semper, quae invenerimus, argumentis one-randus est iudex, quia et tædium adferunt et fidem detrahunt. Neque enim potest iudex credere satis esse ea potentia, quae non putamus ipsi sufficere qui diximus. In rebus vero apertis argumentari tam sit stultum quam in clarissimum solem mortale lumen inferre.
- 9 His quidam probationes adiiciunt, quas παθητικὰς vocant, ductas ex adfectibus. Atque Aristoteles quidem potentissimum putat ex eo, qui dicit, si sit vir bonus; quod ut optimum est, ita longe quidem, 10 sed sequitur tamen, videri. Inde enim illa nobilis Scauri defensio: Q. Varius Sucronensis ait Aemilium Scaurum rem publicam populi Romani prodidisse; Aemilius Scaurus negat. Cui simile quiddam fecisse Iphicrates dicitur, qui cum Aristophontem, quo accusante similis criminis reus erat, interrogasset, an is accepta pecunia rem publicam proditurus esset; isque id negasset: Quod igitur, inquit, tu non fecisses, 11 ego feci? Intuendum autem et qui sit apud quem dicimus, et id quod illi maxime probabile videatur requirendum; qua de re locuti sumus in prooemii et

¹ Rhet. I. ii. 4.

² Ar. Rhet. II. xxiii. 7.

QUINTILIAN

- 12 suasoriae praeceptis. Altera ex adfirmatione probatio est: Ego hoc feci; Tu mihi hoc dixisti; et O facinus indignum! et similia; quae non debent quidem deesse orationi et, si desunt, multum nocent; non tamen habenda sunt inter magna praesidia, cum hoc in eadem causa fieri ex utraque parte similiter possit.
- 13 Illae firmiores ex sua cuique persona probationes, quae credibilem rationem subiectam habeant: ut vulneratus aut filio orbatus non fuerit alium accusaturus quam nocentem, quando, si negotium innocentem facit, liberet eum noxa qui admiserit. Hinc et patres adversus liberos et adversus suos quisque necessarios auctoritatem petunt.
- 14 Quaesitum etiam, potentissima argumenta primone ponenda sint loco, ut occupent animos, an summo, ut inde dimittant, an partita primo summoque, quod Homericæ dispositione in medio sint infirma, ut ab aliis¹ crescant? Quae prout ratio causae cuiusque postulabit, ordinabuntur, uno, ut ego censeo, excepto, ne a potentissimis ad levissima decrescat oratio.
- 15 Ego haec breviter demonstrasse contentus ita posui, ut locos ipsos et genera quam possem apertis-

¹ ab aliis, Butler: aut animis, MSS.

¹ IV. i. 17 sq., III. viii. 36 sq.

² II. iv. 299.

QUINTILIAN

sime ostenderem. Quidam exsecuti sunt verbosius, quibus placuit, proposita locorum communium materia, quo quaeque res modo dici posset, ostendere; sed 16 mihi supervacuum videbatur. Nam et fere apparet, quid in iniuriam, quid in avaritiam, quid in testem inimicum, quid in potentes amicos dicendum sit; et de omnibus his omnia dicere infinitum est, tam hercule quam si controversiarum, quae sint quaeque futurae sint, quaestiones, argumenta, sententias tradere
17 velim. Ipsas autem argumentorum velut sedes non me quidem omnes ostendisse confido, plurimas tamen.

Quod eo diligentius faciendum fuit, quia declamationes, quibus ad pugnam forensem velut praepilatis exerceri solebamus, olim iam ab illa vera imagine orandi recesserunt atque ad solam compositae voluptatem nervis carent, non alio medius fidius vitio dicentium, quam quo mancipiorum negotiatores for-18 mae puerorum virilitate excisa lenocinantur. Nam ut illi robur ac lacertos barbamque ante omnia et alia, quae natura proprie maribus dedit, parum existimant decora, quaeque fortia, si liceret, forent ut dura molliunt, ita nos habitum ipsum orationis virilem et illam vim stricte robusteque dicendi tenera quadam elocutionis cute operimus et, dum levia sint ac

QUINTILIAN

- nitida, quantum valeant, nihil interesse arbitramur.
- 19 Sed mihi naturam intuenti nemo non vir spadone formosior erit, nec tam aversa unquam videbitur ab opere suo providentia, ut debilitas inter optima inventa sit, nec id ferro speciosum fieri putabo, quod, si nasceretur, monstrum erat. Libidinem iuvet ipsum effeminati sexus mendacium, numquam tamen hoc continget malis moribus regnum ut, si qua
- 20 pretiosa fecit, fecerit et bona. Quapropter eloquentiam, licet hanc (ut sentio enim, dicam) libidinosam resupina voluptate auditoria probent, nullam esse existimabo, quae ne minimum quidem in se indicium masculi et incorrupti, ne dicam gravis et sancti viri,
- 21 ostendet. An vero statuarum artifices pictoresque clarissimi, cum corpora quam speciosissima fingendo pingendove efficere cuperent, numquam in hunc inciderunt errorem, ut Bagoam aut Megabyzum aliquem in exemplum operis sumerent sibi, sed Doryphoron illum aptum vel militiae vel palaestrae, aliorum quoque iuvenum bellicosorum et athletarum corpora decora vere existimaverunt: nos, qui oratorem studemus effingere, non arma sed tympana eloquentiae
- 22 demus? Igitur et ille, quem instituimus, adolescens, quam maxime potest, componat se ad imitationem veritatis, initurusque frequenter forensium certaminum pugnam iam in schola victoriam spectet et ferire

¹ Eunuchs.

² The famous statue of Polyclethus, regarded as the standard of manly beauty and proportion. Many copies have survived. Doryphorus = the Spearbearer.

QUINTILIAN

vitalia ac tueri sciat; et praeceptor id maxime exigat, inventum praecipue probet. Nam, ut ad peiora iuvenes laude ducuntur, ita laudari in bonis malent.

- 23 Nunc illud male est, quod necessaria plerumque silentio transeunt, nec in dicendo videtur inter bona utilitas. Sed haec et in alio nobis tractata sunt opere et in hoc saepe repetenda. Nunc ad ordinem inceptum.

XIII. Refutatio dupliciter accipi potest. Nam et pars defensoris tota est posita in refutatione, et quae dicta sunt ex diverso debent utrinque dissolvi. Et hoc est proprie, cui in causis quartus adsignatur locus. Sed utriusque similis condicio est. Neque vero ex aliis locis ratio argumentorum in hac parte peti potest quam in confirmatione, nec locorum aut sententiarum aut verborum et figurarum alia condicio 2 est. Affectus plerumque haec pars initiores habet.

Non sine causa tamen difficilius semper est creditum, quod Cicero saepe testatur, defendere quam accusare. Primum, quod est res illa simplicior, proponitur enim uno modo, dissolvitur varie, cum accusatori satis sit plerumque, verum esse id, quod obicerit, patronus neget, defendat, transferat, excuset,

¹ Perhaps the lost de causis corruptae eloquentiae.

² (i) exordium, (ii) statement of facts, (iii) confirmation, (iv) refutation, (v) peroration.

QUINTILIAN

deprecetur, molliat, minuat, avertat, despiciat, derideat. Quare inde recta fere atque, ut sic dixerim, clamosa est actio; hinc mille flexus et artes desiderantur. Tum accusator praemeditata pleraque domo adfert, patronus etiam inopinatis frequenter occurrit. Accusator dat testem, patronus ex re ipsa refellit. Accusator e criminum invidia, etsi falsa sit, materiam dicendi trahit, de parricidio, sacrilegio, maiestate; quae patrono tantum neganda sunt. Ideoque accusationibus etiam mediocres in dicendo suffecerunt; bonus defensor nemo nisi qui eloquentissimus fuit. Quanquam ut, quod sentio, semel finiam, tanto est accusare quam defendere, quanto facere quam sanare vulnera, facilius.

- 4 Plurimum autem refert, et quid proposuerit¹ adversarius et quomodo. Primum igitur intuendum est, id, cui responsuri sumus, proprium sit eius iudicii an ad causam extra arcessitum. Nam si est proprium, aut negandum aut defendendum aut transferendum;
- 5 extra haec in iudiciis fere nihil est. Deprecatio quidem, quae est sine ulla specie defensionis, rara

¹ proposuerit, Meister : profuerit. AB.

¹ See III. vi. 23. No exact rendering of translatio is possible. Literally it means "transference of the charge": it would seem to cover cases where the charge was brought in the wrong court or by the wrong person. It is used generally to indicate a plea made by defendant in bar of plaintiff's action.

² See VII. iv. 17.

QUINTILIAN

admodum et apud eos solos iudices, qui nulla certa pronuntiandi forma tenentur. Quamquam illae quoque apud C. Caesarem et triumviros pro diversarum partium hominibus actiones, etiamsi precibus utuntur, adhibent tamen patrocina; nisi hoc non fortissime defendentis est dicere, Quid aliud egimus, Tubero,
 6 nisi ut, quod hic potest, nos possemus? Quodsi quando apud principem aliumve, cui utrum velit liceat, dicendum erit, dignum quidem morte eum, pro quo loquemur, clementi tamen servandum esse vel talem, primum omnium non erit res nobis cum adversario sed cum iudice, deinde forma deliberativae magis materiae quam iudicialis utemur. Suadebimus enim ut laudem humanitatis potius quam voluptatem
 7 onis concupiscat. Apud iudices quidem secundum legem dicturos sententiam de confessis praecipere ridiculum est. Ergo, quae neque negari neque transferri possunt, utique defendenda sunt, qualiacunque sunt, aut causa cedendum. Negandi duplicem ostendimus formam, aut non esse factum aut non hoc esse, quod factum sit. Quae neque defendi

¹ e.g. in the emperor's court as opposed to the quaestiones perpetuae or civil actions.

² As in the pro Ligario and pro Deiotaro pleaded in Caesar's house. It is not known what cases were tried before the (2nd) triumvirate.

³ Cic. pro Lig. iv. 10.

QUINTILIAN

neque transferri possunt, utique neganda, nec solum si finitio potest esse pro nobis, sed etiam si nuda
8 infitatio superest. Testes erunt, multa in eos dicere licet; chirographum, de similitudine litterarum disseremus. Utique nihil erit peius quam confessio. Ultima est actionis controversia, cum defendendi
9 negandive non est locus, id est translatio.¹ Atqui quaedam sunt, quae neque negari neque defendi neque transferri possunt. Adulterii rea est quae, cum anno vidua fuisset, enixa est; lis non erit. Quare illud stultissime praecipitur, quod defendi non possit, silentio dissimulandum: siquidem est id, de quo
10 iudex pronuntiaturus est. At si extra causam sit adductum et tantum coniunctum, malim quidem dicere, nihil id ad quaestionem nec esse in iis morandum et minus esse quam adversarius dicat; tamen velut huic simulationi oblivionis ignoscam. Debet enim bonus advocatus pro rei salute brevem negligentiae reprehensionem non pertimescere.
11 Videndum etiam, simul nobis plura aggredienda

¹ translatio, Regius: relatio, MSS.

¹ i.e. if we cannot say "The act was right" or "This court is not competent to try it" or "The prosecutor has no locus standi." See n. on § 2.

² i.e. suggest that it is a forgery.

QUINTILIAN

sint an amolienda singula. Plura simul invadimus, si aut tam infirma sunt, ut pariter impelli possint, aut tam molesta, ut pedem conferre cum singulis non expediat; tum enim toto corpore obnitendum est, ut sic dixerim, directa fronte pugnandum est.

- 12 Interim, si resolvere ex parte diversa dicta difficilius erit, nostra argumenta cum adversariorum argumentis conferemus, si modo haec ut valentiora videantur effici poterit. Quae vero turba valebunt, diducenda erunt, ut, quod paulo ante dixi: Heres eras et pauper et magna pecunia appellaharis a creditoribus et offen-
- 13 deras et mutaturum tabulas testamenti sciebas. Urgent universa; at si singula quaeque dissolveris, iam illa flamma, quae magna congerie convaluerat, diductis quibus alebatur, concidet, ut, si vel maxima flumina in rivos diducantur, qualibet transitum praebent. Itaque propositio quoque secundum hanc utilitatem accommodabitur, ut ea nunc singula ostendamus, nunc
- 14 complectamur universa. Nam interim quod pluribus collegit adversarius, sat est semel proponere; ut, si multas causas faciendi, quod arguit, reo dicet accusator fuisse, nos, non enumeratis singulis, semel hoc in totum¹ negemus, quia non, quisquis causam faci-

¹ hoc in totum, Becher: hoc intuendum, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

15 endi scelëris habuit, et fecerit. Saepius tamen accusatori congerere argumenta, reo dissolvere expediet.

Id autem, quod erit ab adversario dictum, quo-modo refutari debeat, intuendum est. Nam si erit palam falsum, negare satis est, ut pro Cluentio Cicero
eum, quem dixerat accusator epoto poculo concidisse, 16 negat eodem die mortuum. Palam etiam contraria et supervacua et stulta reprehendere nullius est artis, ideoque nec rationes eorum nec exempla tradere necesse est. Id quoque (quod obscurum vocant), quod secreto et sine teste aut argumento dicitur
factum, satis natura sua infirmum est; sufficit enim, quod adversarius non probat; item si ad causam non 17 pertinet. Est tamen interim oratoris efficere, ut quid aut contrarium esse aut a causa diversum aut incredibile aut supervacuum aut nostrae potius causae videatur esse coniunctum. Obiicitur Oppio, quod de 1 militum cibariis detraxerit; asperum crimen, sed id
2 contrarium ostendit Cicero, quia iidem accusatores obiecerint Oppio, quod is voluerit exercitum largi-
3 endo corrumpere. Testes in Cornelium accusator
18 lecti a tribuno codicis pollicetur; facit hoc Cicero

¹ lx. 168.

² cp. § 21 and v. x. 69.

³ cp. iv. iii. 13.

QUINTILIAN

supervacuum, quia ipse fateatur. Petit accusationem in Verrem Q. Caecilius, quod fuerat quaestor eius; 19 ipsum Cicero ut pro se videretur effecit. Cetera, quae proponuntur, communis locus habet. Aut enim coniectura excutiuntur, an vera sint; aut finitione, an propria; aut qualitate, an inhonesta, iniqua, improba, inhumana, crudelia et cetera, quae ei generi 20 accidunt. Eaque non modo in propositionibus et rationibus sed in toto genere actionis intuenda: an sit crudelis, ut Labieni in Rabirium lege perduellionis; inhumana, ut Tuberonis Ligarium exulem accusantis atque id agentis ne ei Caesar ignoscat; superba, 21 ut in Oppium ex epistola Cottae reum factum. Perinde praecipites, insidiosae, impotentes deprehenduntur. Ex quibus tamen fortissime invaseris, quod est aut omnibus periculosum, ut dicit Cicero pro Tullio: Quis hoc statuit unquam, aut cui concedi sine summo omnium periculo potest, ut eum iure potuerit occidere, a quo metuisse se dicat, ne ipse posterius occide-

¹ Cicero argues that since the relation between praetor and quaestor is almost that which should exist between father and son, a quaestor should not be allowed to prosecute his praetor.

² Rabirius was accused of causing the death of Saturninus forty years after the event.

³ P. Oppius, quaestor to M. Aurelius Cotta in Bithynia, was charged by Cotta in a letter to the senate with misappropriation of supplies for the troops and with an attempt on his life. Cicero defended him in 69 B.C. The speech is lost.

QUINTILIAN

- retur?* aut ipsis iudicibus, ut pro Oppio monet pluribus, ne illud actionis genus in equestrem ordinem admittant. Nonnunquam tamen quaedam bene et contemnuntur vel tanquam levia vel tanquam nihil ad causam pertinentia. Multis hoc locis fecit Cicero; et haec simulatio interim hucusque procedit, ut, quae dicendo refutare non possumus, quasi fastidendo calcemus.
- 23 Quoniam vero maxima pars eorum similibus constat, rimandum erit diligentissime, quid sit in quoque, quod adsumitur, dissimile. In iure facileprehenditur. Est enim scriptum de rebus utique diversis, tantoque magis ipsarum rerum differentia potest esse manifesta. Illas vero similitudines, quae ducuntur ex mutis animalibus aut inanimis, facile est
- 24 eludere. Exempla rerum varie tractanda sunt, si nocebunt; quae si vetera erunt, fabulosa dicere licebit; si indubia, maxime quidem dissimilia. Neque enim fieri potest, ut paria sint per omnia, ut si Nasica post occisum Gracchum defendatur exemplo Ahialae, a quo Maelius est interfectus, Maelium regni adfectatorem fuisse, a Graccho leges modo latas esse populares, Ahialam magistrum equitum fuisse, Nasicam privatum esse dicatur. Si defecerint omnia, viden-

¹ A third of the jury were composed of equites.

² cp. III. vii. 20, v. ix. 13.

QUINTILIAN

dum erit, an obtineri possit, ne illud quidem recte factum. Quod de exemplis, idem etiam de iudicatis observandum.

- 25 Quod autem posui, referre, quo quidque accusator modo dixerit, huc pertinet, ut, si est minus efficaciter elocutus, ipsa eius verba ponantur; si acri et vehementi fuerit usus oratione, eandem rem nostris verbis initioribus proferamus, ut Cicero de Cornelio, Codicem
 26 attigit; et protinus cum quadam defensione, ut, si pro luxurioso dicendum sit, Obiecta est paulo liberalior vita. Sic et pro sordido parcum, pro maledico liberum
 27 dicere licebit. Utique committendum nunquam est, ut adversariorum dicta cum sua confirmatione referamus, aut etiam loci alicuius exsecutione adiuvemus, nisi cum eludenda erunt: Apud exercitum mihi fueris, inquit; tot annis forum non attigeris, abfueris tamdiu et, cum tam longo intervallo veneris, cum his, qui in foro
 28 habitarunt, de dignitate contendas? Praeterea in contradictione interim totum crimen exponitur, ut Cicero pro Scauro circa Bostarem facit veluti orationem diversae partis imitatus, aut pluribus propositionibus iunctis, ut pro Vareno, cum iter per agros et loca sola

¹ cp. IV. iv. 8.

² cp. IV. ii. 77.

³ pro Mur. ix. 21.

⁴ cp. IV. i. 69. Scaurus was accused of extortion in Sardinia, and of having murdered a certain Bostar at a banquet.

⁵ cp. V. x. 69.

QUINTILIAN

faceret cum Pompuleno, in familiam Ancharianam incidisse dixerunt, deinde Pompulenum occisum esse, illico Varenum vinctum asservatum, dum hic ostenderet, quid de eo fieri vellet. Quod est utile,¹ si erit incredibilis rei ordo et ipsa expositione fidem perditurus. Interim per partes dissolvitur, quod contextu nocet; et plerumque id est tutius. Quaedam contradictiones natura sunt singulae; id exemplis non eget.

- 29 Communia bene apprehenduntur non tantum, quia utriusque sunt partis, sed quia plus prosunt respondent. Neque enim pigebit, quod saepe monui, referre; commune qui prior dicit, contrarium facit.
- 30 Est enim contrarium, quo adversarius bene uti potest: At enim non verisimile est, tantum scelus M. Cottam esse commentum. Quid? hoc verisimile est, tantum scelus Oppium esse conatum? Artificis autem est invenire in actione adversarii quae contra semetipsa pugnent aut pugnare videantur, quae aliquando ex rebus ipsis manifesta sunt, ut in causa Caeliana Clodia aurum se Caelio commodasse dicit, quod signum magnae familiaritatis est; venenum sibi paratum, quod summi

¹ utile, Badins: utique, MSS.

¹ i.e. are easy to make use of.

² pro Cael. xlii.

QUINTILIAN

- 31 odii argumentum est. Tubero Ligarium accusat, quod is in Africa fuerit, et queritur, quod ab eo ipse in Africam non sit admissus. Aliquando vero praebet eius rei occasionem minus considerata ex adverso dicentis oratio; quod accidit praecipue cupidis sententiarum, ut ducti occasione dicendi non respiciant quid dixerint, dum locum praesentem non totam
- 32 causam intuentur. Quid tam videri potest contra Cluentium quam censoria nota? Quid tam contra eundem, quam filium ab Egnatio corrupti iudicii, quo Cluentius Oppianicum circumvenisset, crimine
- 33 exheredatum? At haec Cicero pugnare invicem ostendit: Sed tu, Atti, consideres, censeo, diligenter, utrum censorium iudicium grave velis esse an Egnatii. Si Egnatii, leve est, quod censores de ceteris subscripserunt. Ipsum enim Egnatium, quem tu gravem esse vis, ex senatu eiecerunt. Sin autem censorium, hunc Egnatium, quem pater censoria subscriptione exheredavit, censores in senatu, cum patrem eiecissent, relinuerunt.
- 34 Illa magis vitiose dicuntur quam acute reprehenden-

¹ pro Lig. iii.

² pro Cluent. xlviii. 135.

QUINTILIAN

- duntur, argumentum dubium pro necessario, controversum pro confesso, commune pluribus pro proprio, vulgare, supervacuum, constitutum contra fidem. Nam et illa accidunt parum cautis, ut crimen augeant, quod probandum est; de facto disputent, cum de auctore quaeratur; impossibilia aggrediantur, pro effectis relinquant vixdum inchoata, de homine
- 35 dicere quam de causa malint; hominum vitia rebus adsignent, ut, si quis decemviratum accuset non Appium; manifestis repugnent; dicant, quod aliter accipi possit; summam quaestionis non intueantur, non ad proposita respondeant; quod unum aliquando recipi potest, cum mala causa adhibitis extrinsecus remediis tuenda est, ut cum peculatus reus Verres fortiter et industrie tuitus contra piratas Siciliam dicitur.
- 36 Eadem adversus contradictiones nobis oppositas praecepta sunt, hoc tamen amplius, quod circa eas multi duobus vitiis diversis laborant. Nam quidam etiam in foro tanquam rem molestam et odiosam praetereunt, et iis plerumque, quae composita domo

QUINTILIAN

attulerunt, contenti sine adversario dicunt; et scilicet multo magis in scholis, in quibus non solum contradictiones omittuntur, verum etiam materiae ipsae sic plerumque finguntur, ut nihil dici pro parte altera
 37 possit. Alii diligentia lapsi verbis etiam vel sententiolis omnibus respondendum putant, quod est et infinitum et supervacuum; non enim causa reprehenditur sed actor; quem ego semper videri malim disertum, ut, si dixerit quod rei prosit, ingenii credatur laus esse non causae; si forte laedat,¹
 38 causae non ingenii culpa. Itaque illae reprehensiones aut obscuritatis, qualis in Rullum est, aut infantiae in dicendo, qualis in Pisonem, aut inscitiae rerum verborumque et insulsitatis etiam, qualis in Antonium est, animo dantur et iustis odiis, suntque utiles ad conciliandum iis, quos invisos facere volueris, 39 odium. Alia respondendi patronis ratio; et aliquando tamen eorum non oratio modo, sed vita etiam, vultus denique, incessus, habitus recte incusari solet; ut adversus Quintium Cicero non haec solum, sed ipsam etiam praetextam demissam ad talos insectatus est. Presserat enim turbulentis contionibus Cluentium

¹ non laedat, MSS., corrected by Becher.

¹ de Leg. Agr. II. v. 13.

² in Pis. i. 30, etc.

³ Phil. ii. 4, iii. 4, xiii. 19, etc.

⁴ pro Cluent. xl. 111.

QUINTILIAN

40 Quintius. Nonnunquam elevandae invidiae gratia, quae asperius dicta sunt, eluduntur, ut a Cicerone Triarius. Nam cum Scauri columnas per urbem plaustis vectas esse dixit, Ego porro, inquit, qui Albanas habeo columnas, clitellis eas apportavi. Et magis hoc in accusatores concessum est, quibus con-41 viciari aliquando patrocinii fides cogit. Illa vero adversus omnes et recepta et non inhumana con-questio, si callide quid tacuisse, breviasse, obscurasse 42 distulisse dicuntur. Defensionis quoque permutatio reprehenditur saepe, ut Attius adversus Cluentium, Aeschines adversus Ctesiphontem facit, cum ille Ciceronem lege usurum modo, hic minime de lege dicturum Demosthenen queritur.

Declamatores vero inprimis sunt admonendi, ne
contradictiones eas ponant, quibus facillime responderi possit, neu sibi stultum adversarium fingant.
Facimus autem (quod maxime uberes loci popula-resque sententiae nascuntur materiam dicendi nobis,

¹ pro Scauro xxii. 46.

² pro Cluent. lii.

³ Aesch. in Ctes. § 206. cp. also iii. vi. 3.

QUINTILIAN

quod volumus, ducentibus) ut non sit ille inutilis versus :

Non male respondit, male enim prior ille rogarat.

- 43 Fallet haec nos in foro consuetudo, ubi adversario, non ipsi nobis respondebimus. Aiunt Accium interrogatum, cur causas non ageret, cum apud eum in tragoediis tanta vis esset optime respondendi, hanc reddidisse rationem, quod illic ea dicerentur quae ipse vellet, in foro dicturi adversarii essent quae minime 44 vellet. Ridiculum est ergo in exercitationibus, quae foro praeparant, prius cogitare quid responderi quam quid ex diverso dici possit. Et bonus praeceptor non minus laudare discipulum debet, si quid pro diversa quam si quid pro sua parte acriter ex-
45 cogitavit. Rursus aliud in scholis permittendum semper, in foro rarum. Nam loco a petitore primo contradictione uti qui possumus, ubi vera res agitur, 46 cum adversarius adhuc nihil dixerit? Incidunt tamen plerique in hoc vitium vel consuetudine declamatoria vel etiam cupiditate dicendi, dantque de se respondentibus venustissimos lusus, cum modo, se vero nihil dixisse neque tam stulte dicturos; modo, bene admonitos ab adversario et agere gratias, quod adiuti

¹ Origin unknown.

QUINTILIAN

- sint, iocantur; frequentissime vero, id quod firmissimum est, nunquam iis responsurum adversarium fuisse, quae proposita non essent, nisi illa sciret vera esse et ad fatendum conscientia esset impulsus; ut
- 47 pro Cluentio Cicero: Nam hoc persuepe dixisti, tibi sic renuntiari, me habere in animo causam hanc praesidio legis defendere. Itane est? ab amicis imprudentes videlicet prodimur? et est nescio quis de iis, quos amicos nobis arbitramur, qui nostra consilia ad adversarium deferat? Quisnam hoc tibi renuntiavit? quis tam improbus fuit; cui ego autem narravi? Nemo, ut opinor, in culpa est;
- 48 nimirum tibi istud lex ipsa renuntiavit. At quidam contradictione non contenti totos etiam locos explicant: scire se hoc dicturos adversarios et ita persecuturos. Quod factum venuste nostris temporibus elusit Vibius Crispus, vir ingenii iucundi et elegantis: Ego vero, inquit, ista non dico; quid enim attinet illa bis dici?
- 49 Nonnunquam tamen aliquid simile contradictioni poni potest, si quid ab adversario testationibus comprehensum in advocationibus iactatum sit; respondebimus enim rei ab illis dictae, non a nobis excogitatae; aut, si id genus erit causae, ut proponere

¹ lii. 143.

² The exact purport is not clear. The reference would seem to be to information as to the line of defence likely to be adopted, which has leaked out during a discussion of the written evidence by the advocati or legal advisers of the patronus.

QUINTILIAN

possimus certa, extra quae dici nihil possit: ut, cum res furtiva in domo deprehensa sit, dicat necesse est reus aut se ignorante illatam aut depositam apud se aut donatam sibi; quibus omnibus, etiamsi proposita 50 non sunt, responderi potest. At in scholis recte et propositionibus¹ et contradictionibus occurremus, ut in utrumque locum, id est primum et secundum, simul plurimum exerceamur. Quod nisi fecerimus, nunquam utemur contradictione; non enim erit, cui respondeamus.

51 Est et illud vitium nimium sollicite et circa omnia momenta luctantis; suspectam enim facit iudici causam, et frequenter, quae statim dicta omnem dubitationem sustulissent, dilata ipsis praeparationibus fidem perdunt, quia patronus et aliis crediderit opus fuisse. Fiduciam igitur orator prae se ferat semperque ita dicat, tanquam de causa optime sentiat; quod
52 sicut omnia in Cicerone praecipuum est. Nam illa summa cura securitatis est similis, tantaque in oratione auctoritas, ut probationis locum obtineat dubitare nobis non audentibus. Porro, qui scierit, quid pars adversa, quid nostra habeat valentissimum, facile iudicabit, quibus maxime rebus vel occurrendum sit vel instandum.

¹ propositionibus, added by Badius. See note prefixed to Index.

QUINTILIAN

- 53 Ordo quidem in parte nulla minus adfert laboris. Nam si agimus, nostra confirmanda sunt primum, tum, quae nostris opponuntur refutanda; si respon-
- 54 demus, prius incipiendum est a refutatione. Nascentur autem ex his, quae contradictioni opposuimus, aliae contradictiones, euntque interim longius; ut gladiatorum manus, quae secundae vocantur, fiunt et tertiae, si prima ad evocandum adversarii ictum prolata erat, et quartae, si geminata captatio est, ut
- 55 ultra ducit. Sed illam etiam, quam supra ostendi, simplicem ex adfectibus atque ex adfirmatione sola probationem recipit refutatio, qualis est illa Scauri, de qua supra dixi; quin nescio an etiam frequentior, ubi quid negatur. Videndum praecipue utrique parti, ubi sit rei summa. Nam fere accidit, ut in causis multa dicantur, de paucis iudicetur.
- 56 In his probandi refutandique ratio est, sed adiuvanda viribus dicentis et ornanda. Quamlibet enim sint ad dicendum, quod volumus, accommodata, ieiuna¹ tamen erunt et infirma, nisi maiore quodam-
- 57 oratoris spiritu implentur. Quare et illi communes

¹ ieiuna, Bonnell: pecunia, A: omitted by B.

¹ Not enough is known of gladiatorial fighting to render this passage fully intelligible.

² v. xii. 12.

³ v. xii. 10.

QUINTILIAN

loci de testibus, de tabulis, de argumentis aliisque similibus magnam vim animis iudicum adferunt, et hi proprii, quibus factum quodque laudamus aut contra,
iustum vel iniustum docemus, maius aut minus, aspe-rius aut mitius. Ex iis autem alii ad comparisonem singulorum argumentorum faciunt, alii ad plurium, 58 alii ad totius causae inclinationem. Ex quibus sunt qui praeparent animum iudicis, sunt qui confirment.
Sed praeparatio quoque aut confirmatio aliquando
totius causae est, aliquando partium, et proinde, ut 59 cuique conveniunt, subiicienda. Ideoque miror inter duos diversarum sectarum velut duces non mediocri contentione quaesitum, singulisne quaestionibus sub-iiciendi essent loci, ut Theodoro placet, an prius docendus iudex quam movendus, ut praecipit Apollodus, tanquam perierit haec ratio media, et nihil cum ipsius causae utilitate sit deliberandum.
Haec praecipunt, qui ipsi non dicunt in foro,
ut artes a securis otiosisque compositae ipsa pug-60 nae necessitate turbentur. Namque omnes fere, qui legem dicendi quasi quaedam mysteria tradiderunt, certis non inveniendorum modo argumentorum

¹ cp. v. xiv. 27.

QUINTILIAN

locis, sed concludendorum quoque nos praeceptis alligaverunt; de quibus brevissime praelocutus, quid ipse sentiam, id est quid clarissimos oratores fecisse videam, non tacebo.

XIV. Igitur enthymema et argumentum ipsum, id est rem, quae probationi alterius adhibetur, appellant et argumenti elocutionem, eam vero, ut dixi, duplicem: ex consequentibus, quod habet propositionem coniunctamque ei protinus probationem, quale pro Ligario, Causa tum dubia, quod erat aliquid in utraque parte, quod probari posset; nunc melior ea iudicanda est, quam etiam dii adiuverunt; habet enim rationem et 2 propositionem, non habet conclusionem. Ita est ille imperfectus syllogismus. Ex pugnantis vero, quod etiam solum enthymema quidam vocant, fortior multo probatio est. Tale est Ciceronis pro Milone: Eius igitur mortis sedetis ultores, cuius vitam si putetis per vos
 3 restitui posse, nolitis. Quod quidem etiam aliquando multiplicari solet, ut est ab eodem et pro eodem reo factum: Quem igitur cum omnium gratia noluit, hunc voluit cum aliquorum querela? quem iure, quem loco,

¹ For this chapter see note prefixed to Index. ² cp. v. x. 2.

³ vi. 19. The cause helped by heaven is that of Caesar. cp. Lucan's victrix causa deis placuit, sed victa Catoni.

⁴ cp. v. x. 2.

⁵ xxix. 79. The death is that of Clodius. ⁶ xvi. 41.

QUINTILIAN

quem tempore, quem impune non est ausus, hunc iniuria, iniquo loco, alieno tempore, cum periculo capitis non 4 dubitavit occidere? Optimum autem videtur enthymematis genus, cum propositio dissimili vel contraria ratio subiungitur, quale est Demosthenis:
Non enim, si quid unquam contra leges actum est, idque tu es imitatus, idcirco te convenit poena liberari; quin e contrario damnari multo magis. Nam ut, si quis eorum damnatus esset, tu haec non scripsisses, ita, damnatus tu si fuero, non scribet alius.

5 Epichirematos et quattuor et quinque et sex etiam factae sunt partes a quibusdam. Cicero maxime quinque defendit, ut sit propositio, deinde ratio eius,
 tum adsumptio et eius probatio, quinta complexio;
 quia vero interim et propositio non egeat rationis et adsumptio probationis, nonnunquam etiam complexi-one opus non sit, et quadripertitam et tripertitam et 6 bipertitam quoque fieri posse ratiocinationem. Mihi et pluribus nihilominus auctoribus tres summum videntur. Nam ita se habet ipsa natura, ut sit, de quo quaeratur et per quod probetur; tertium adiici potest velut ex consensu duorum antecedentium. Ita erit

¹ in Androt. § 7; in Aristocr. § 99.

² de Inv. I. xxxvii. 67.

QUINTILIAN

- prima intentio, secunda adsumptio, tertia connexio.
 Nam confirmatio primae ac secundae partis et exor-7 natio eisdem cedere possunt, quibus subiiciuntur. Sumamus enim ex Cicerone quinque partium exemplum :
Melius gubernantur ea, quae consilio reguntur quam quae sine consilio administrantur. Hanc primam partem numerant; eam deinceps rationibus variis et quam copiosissimis verbis approbari putant oportere. Hoc ego totum cum sua ratione unum puto; alioqui si ratio pars est, est autem varia ratio, plures partes 8 esse dicantur. Adsumptionem deinde ponit: Nihil autem omnium rerum melius quam omnis mundus admini-stratur. Huius adsumptionis quarto in loco iam porro inducunt approbationem; de quo idem quod supra 9 dico. Quinto inducunt loco complexionem, quae aut id infert solum quod ex omnibus partibus cogitur, hoc modo, Consilio igitur mundus administratur; aut,
 unum in locum cum conduxit breviter propositionem
 et adsumptionem, adiungit quid ex his conficiatur, ad
 hunc modum: Quodsi melius geruntur, quae consilio
quam quae sine consilio administrantur, nihil autem omnium rerum melius quam omnis mundus administra-tur, consilio igitur mundus administratur. Cui parti consentio.
 10 In tribus autem, quas fecimus, partibus non est

¹ de Inv. I. xxxiv. 58.

QUINTILIAN

- forma semper eadem, sed una, in qua idem concluditur quod intenditur: Anima immortalis est. Nam quidquid ex se ipso movetur, immortale est; anima autem ex se ipsa movetur, immortalis igitur est anima. Hoc fit non solum in singulis argumentis sed in totis causis,
- 11 quae sunt simplices, et in quaestionibus. Nam et hae primam habent propositionem: Sacrilegium commisisti; Non, quisquis hominem occidit, caedis tenetur, deinde rationem; (sed haec est in causis et quaestione longior quam in singulis argumentis) et plerumque summa complexione, vel per enumerationem vel per brevem conclusionem, testantur, quid effecerint. In hoc genere propositio dubia est, de
- 12 hac enim quaeritur. Altera est complexio non par intentioni sed vim habens parem: Mors nihil ad nos, nam quod est dissolutum, sensu caret; quod autem sensu caret, nihil ad nos. In alio genere non eadem propositio est quae connexio: Omnia animalia meliora sunt quam inanima, nihil autem melius est mundo, mundus igitur animal. Hic potest videri deesse intentio.¹ Potuit enim sic constitui ratiocinatio: Animal est mundus, omnia enim animalia meliora sunt quam inanima
- 13 et cetera. Haec propositio aut confessa est ut

¹ deesse, Madvig: de re, MSS.: intentio, Spalding: contentio, MSS.

¹ See III. vi. 9, 10.

QUINTILIAN

proxima, aut probanda ut, Qui beatam vitam vivere volet, philosophetur oportet, non enim conceditur; cetera sequi nisi confirmata prima parte non possunt. Item adsumptio interim confessa est ut, Omnes autem volunt beatam vitam vivere; interim probanda ut illa, Quod est dissolutum, sensu caret; cum, soluta corpore anima an sit immortalis vel ad tempus certe maneat, sit in dubio. Quam adsumptionem alii, rationem alii vocant.

- 14 Epichirema autem nullo differt a syllogismis, nisi quod illi et plures habent species et vera colligunt veris, epichirematis frequentior circa credibilia est usus. Nam si contingeret semper controversa confessis probare, vix esset in hoc genere usus oratoris.
- 15 Nam quo ingenio est opus, ut dicas: Bona ad me pertinent, solus enim sum filius defuncti, vel solus heres, cum iure bonorum possessio testati secundum tabulas testamenti detur, ad me igitur pertinet. Sed cum ipsa ratio in quaestionem venit, efficiendum est certum id quo probaturi sumus quod incertum est: ut si ipsa forte intentione dicatur aut filius non es aut non es legitimus aut non es solus, itemque aut non es heres, aut non iustum testamentum est, aut capere non potes, aut hābes coheredes, efficiendum est iustum, propter quod

QUINTILIAN

- 17 nobis bona adiudicari debeant. Sed tum est necessaria illa summa connexio, cum intervenit ratio longior; alioqui sufficiunt intentio ac ratio: Silent enim leges inter arma nec se expectari iubent, cum ei, qui expectare velit, ante iniusta poena luenda sit quam iusta repetenda. Ideoque id enthymema, quod est ex consequentibus, rationi simile dixerunt. Sed et singula, interimque recte, ponuntur, ut ipsum illud
- 18 Silent leges inter arma; et a ratione incipere fas est, deinde concludere, ut ibidem: Quodsi duodecim tabulae nocturnum furem quoquo modo, diurnum autem, si se telo defenderet, interfici impune voluerunt, quis est qui, quoquo modo quis interfectus sit, puniendum putet? Variavit hic adhuc et rursus rationem tertio loco posuit, cum videat aliquando gladium nobis ab ipsis
- 19 porrigi legibus. Per constantem¹ partis duxit ordinem: Insidiatori vero et latroni quae potest inferri iniusta nex? hoc intentio; Quid comitatus nostri, quid gladii volunt? hoc ratio; Quos habere certe non liceret, si uti illis nullo pacto liceret, hoc ex ratione et intentione connexio.

¹ per constantem, Radermacher: prioris autem, MSS.

¹ pro Mil. iv. 10.

² ib. iii. 9.

³ ib. iv. 10.

QUINTILIAN

- 20 Huic generi probationis tribus occurritur modis, id est per omnes partes. Aut enim expugnatur intentio aut adsumptio aut conclusio, nonnunquam omnia. Intentio expugnatur: Iure occidi eum, qui insidiatus sit. Nam prima statim quaestio pro Milone est, an ei fas sit lucem intueri qui a se hominem neatum
- 21 esse fateatur. Expugnatur adsumptio omnibus iis quae de refutatione diximus. Et ratio quidem nonnunquam¹ est vera, cum eius propositio vera non sit; interim verae propositionis falsa ratio est. Virtus bonum est, verum est; si quis rationem subiiciat, quod ea locupletes faciat, verae intentionis falsa sit ratio.
- 22 Conclusio autem aut vera negatur, cum aliud colligit quam id quod ex prioribus efficitur, aut nihil ad quaestionem dicitur pertinere. Non est vera sic: Insidiator iure occiditur; nam cum vitae vim adferat ut hostis, debet etiam repelli ut hostis; recte igitur Clodius ut hostis occisus est; non utique, nondum enim Clodium insidiatorem ostendimus. Sed fit vera connexio, Recte igitur insidiator ut hostis occiditur; nihil ad nos,
- 23 nondum enim Clodius insidiator apparet. Sed ut potest vera esse intentio et ratio et tamen falsa

¹ nonnunquam, MSS.: nunquam, Victor.

¹ In the preceding chapter.

QUINTILIAN

connexio, ita, si illa falsa sunt, nunquam est vera connexio.

- 24 Enthymema ab aliis oratorius syllogismus, ab aliis
pars dicitur syllogismi, propterea quod syllogismus utique conclusionem et propositionem habet et per omnes partes efficit, quod proposuit, enthymema 25 tantum intelligi contentum sit. Syllogismus talis :
*Solum bonum virtus, nam id demum bonum est, quo nemo
male uti potest ; virtute nemo male uti potest, bonum est
ergo virtus.* Enthymema ex consequentibus : Bonum est virtus, qua nemo male uti potest. Et contra, *Non est
bonum pecunia ; non enim bonum, quo quis male uti potest ; pecunia potest quis male uti, non igitur bonum est
pecunia.* Enthymema ex pugnantibus : An bonum est
26 *pecunia, qua quis male uti potest ?—Si pecunia, quae est in argento signato, argentum est, qui argentum omne legavit, et pecuniam, quae est in argento signato, legavit ;
argentum autem omne legavit, igitur et pecuniam, quae est
in argento, legavit, habet formam syllogismi.* Oratori
satis est dicere, Cum argentum legaverit omne, pecuniam quoque legavit, quae est in argento.
- 27 Peregissem mihi videor sacra tradentium artes, sed
consilio locus superest. Namque ego, ut in oratione
- 362

QUINTILIAN

- syllogismo quidem aliquando uti nefas non duco, ita constare totam aut certe confertam esse aggressionum et enthymematum stipatione minime velim. Dialogis enim et dialecticis disputationibus erit similior quam nostri operis actionibus, quae quidem inter se plurimum differunt. Namque in illis homines docti et inter doctos verum quaerentes minutius et scrupulosius scrutantur omnia, et ad liquidum confessumque perducunt, ut qui sibi et inveniendi et iudicandi vindicent partes, quarum alteram τοπικήν alteram κριτικήν vocant. Nobis ad aliorum iudicia componenda est oratio, et saepius apud omnino imperitos atque illarum certe ignaros litterarum loquendum est, quos nisi et delectatione allicimus et viribus trahimus et nonnunquam turbamus adfectibus, ipsa, quae iusta ac vera sunt, tenere non possumus.
- Locuples et speciosa et imperiosa vult esse eloquentia; quorum nihil consequetur, si conclusionibus certis et in unam prope formam cadentibus concisa et contemptum ex humilitate et odium ex quadam severitate et ex copia satietatem et ex similitudine fastidium attulerit. Feratur ergo non semitis sed campis, non uti fontes angustis fistulis colliguntur
- 364

QUINTILIAN

- sed ut beatissimi amnes totis vallibus fluunt, ac sibi viam, si quando non acceperit, faciat. Nam quid illa miserius lege velut praeformatas infantibus litteras persequentium et, ut Graeci dicere solent, quem mater amictum dedit, sollicite custodientium: propositio ac conclusio ex consequentibus et repugnans
- 32 tibus? Non inspiret? non augeat? non mille figuris variet ac verset? ut ea nasci et ipsa provenire natura, non manu facta et arte suspecta magistrum fateri ubique videantur? Quis unquam sic dixit orator? Nonne apud ipsum Demosthenen paucissima huius generis¹ reperiuntur? Quae apprehensa Graeci magis (nam hoc solum peius faciunt) in catenas ligant et inexplicabili serie connectunt, et indubitata colligunt et probant confessa et se antiquis per hoc similes vocant, deinde interrogati nunquam respondebunt, quem imitentur. Sed de figuris alio loco.
- 33 Nunc illud adiiciendum, ne iis quidem consentire me, qui semper argumenta sermone puro et dilucido et distincto ceterum minime elato ornatoque putant esse dicenda. Namque ea distincta quidem ac per-

¹ generis, Zumpt: veris, A: veris vel artis, G.

¹ The proverb which is also found in Plutarch (de Alex. Fort. i. 330 B) seems to refer to a child's passionate fondness for some particular garment. ² ix. i. ii. iii.

QUINTILIAN

spicua debere esse confiteor, in rebus vero minoribus etiam sermone ac verbis quam maxime propriis et ex 34 usu; at si maior erit materia, nullum iis ornatum, qui modo non obscuret, subtrahendum puto. Nam et saepe plurimum lucis adfert ipsa translatio, cum etiam iurisconsulti, quorum summus circa verborum proprietatem labor est, litus esse audeant dicere, qua
35 fluctus eludit.¹ Quoque quid est natura magis asperum, hoc pluribus condiendum est voluptatibus; et minus suspecta argumentatio dissimulatione, et multum ad fidem adiuvat audientis voluptas. Nisi forte existimamus Ciceronem haec ipsa mala in argumentatione dixisse, silere leges inter arma, et gladium nobis interim ab ipsis porrigi legibus. Hic tamen habendus istis modus, ut sint ornamento non impedimento.

¹ elidit, Valla.

LIBER VI

PROOEMIUM

HAEC, Marcelle Victori, ex tua voluntate maxime ingressus, tum si qua ex nobis ad iuvenes bonos pervenire posset utilitas, novissime paene etiam necessitate quadam officii delegati mihi sedulo laborabam;
respiens tamen illam curam meae voluptatis, quod
filio, cuius eminens ingenium sollicitam quoque parentis diligentiam merebatur, hanc optimam par-tem relicturus hereditatis videbar ut, si me, quod aequum et optabile fuit, fata intercepissent, prae-2 ceptore tamen patre uteretur. At me fortuna id agentem diebus ac noctibus festinantemque metu meae mortalitatis ita subito prostravit, ut laboris mei fructus ad neminem minus quam ad me pertineret.
Illum enim, de quo summa conceperam et in quo
spem unicam senectutis reponebam, repetito vulnere 3 orbitatis amisi. Quid nunc agam? aut quem ultra

cp. Proem, Bk. I.

² cp. Proem, Bk. IV.

QUINTILIAN

esse usum mei, diis repugnantibus, credam? Nam ita forte accidit, ut eum quoque librum, quem de causis corruptae eloquentiae emisi, iam scribere aggressus ictu simili ferirer. Nonne igitur optimum fuit, infaustum opus et quidquid hoc est in me infelici-
4 vivacitatem novis insuper curis fatigare? Quis enim mihi bonus parens ignoscat, si studere amplius possum, ac non oderit hanc animi mei firmitatem, si quis in me alius usus vocis, quam ut incusem deos superstes omnium meorum, nullam in terras despicere providentiam tester, si non meo casu, cui tamen nihil obici, nisi quod vivam, potest, at illorum certe, quos utique immeritos mors acerba damnavit, erepta prius mihi matre eorundem, quae nondum expleto
5 aetatis undevicesimo anno duos enixa filios, quamvis acerbissimis rapta fatis, non infelix decessit? Ego vel hoc uno malo sic eram afflictus, ut me iam nulla
6 fortuna posset efficere felicem. Nam cum omni virtute, quae in feminas cadit, functa insanabilem attulit marito dolorem, tum aetate tam puellari, praesertim meae comparata, potest et ipsa numerari
8 inter vulnera orbitatis. Liberis tamen superstitibus et, quod nefas erat, sed optabat ipsa, me salvo maxi-

QUINTILIAN

mos cruciatus praecipiti via effugit. Mihi filius minor quintum egressus annum prior alterum ex duobus
7 eruit lumen. Non sum ambitiosus in malis nec augere lacrimarum causas volo, utinamque esset ratio minuendi. Sed dissimulare qui possum, quid ille gratiae in vultu, quid iucunditatis in sermone, quos ingenii igniculos, quam substantiam placidae et (quod scio vix posse credi) iam tum altae mentis ostenderit;
qualis amorem quicumque alienus infans mereretur.
8 Illud vero insidiantis, quo me validius cruciaret, fortunae fuit, ut ille mihi blandissimus me suis nutricibus, me aviae educanti, me omnibus, qui sollicitare 9 illas aetates solent, anteferebat. Quapropter illi do-lori, quem ex matre optima atque omnem laudem supergressa paucos ante menses ceperam, gratulor.
Minus enim est, quod flendum meo nomine quam
quod illius gaudendum est.

Una post haec Quintiliani mei spe ac voluptate
10 nitebar, et poterat sufficere solacio. Non enim flosculos, sicut prior, sed iam decimum aetatis ingressus annum, certos ac deformatos fructus ostenderat.
Iuro per mala mea, per infelicem conscientiam, per illos manes, numina mei doloris, eas me in illo vidisse virtutes ingenii, non modo ad percipiendas disciplinas, quo nihil praestantius cognovi plurima expertus, studiique iam tum non coacti (sciunt prae-

QUINTILIAN

- ceptores), sed probitatis, pietatis, humanitatis, liberalitatis, ut prorsus posset hinc esse tanti fulminis metus, quod observatum fere est celerius occidere festinatam maturitatem et esse nescio quam, quae
 11 quam homini datum est nostra provehantur. Etiam illa fortuita aderant omnia, vocis iucunditas claritasque, oris suavitas et in utracunque lingua, tanquam ad eam demum natus esset, expressa proprietas omnium litterarum. Sed hae spes adhuc; illa maiora, constantia, gravitas, contra dolores etiam ac metus robur. Nam quo ille animo, qua medicorum admiratione mensium octo valetudinem tulit! ut me in supremis consolatus est¹ quam etiam deficiens iamque non noster ipsum illum alienatae mentis
 12 errorem circa scholas ac litteras habuit! Tuosne ego, o meae spes inanes, labentes oculos, tuum fugientem spiritum vidi? Tuum corpus frigidum exsangue complexus animam recipere auramque communem haurire amplius potui, dignus his cruciatibus, quos 13 fero, dignus his cogitationibus? Tene consulari nuper adoptione ad omnium spes honorum prius admotum, te avunculo praetori generum destinatum, te [omnium spes] avitae eloquentiae candidatum, super-

¹ It was customary for the next-of-kin to receive in the mouth the last breath of the dying to continue the existence of the spirit.

QUINTILIAN

X 14 stes parens tantum ad poenas, amisi¹? Et si non cupido lucis, certe patientia vindicet te reliqua mea aetate. Nam frustra mala omnia ad crimen fortunae 15 relegamus. Nemo nisi sua culpa diu dolet. Sed vivimus, et aliqua vivendi ratio quaerenda est, credendumque doctissimis hominibus, qui unicum ad-versorum solacium litteras putaverunt. Si quando tamen ita resederit praesens impetus, ut aliqua tot luctibus alia cogitatio inseri possit, non iniuste peti-erim morae veniam. Quis enim dilata studia mire-tur, quae potius non abrupta esse mirandum est?
 16 Tum, si qua fuerint minus effecta iis, quae levius
 adhuc adfecti coeperamus, imperitanti fortunae remittantur, quae, si quid mediocrium alioqui in nostro ingenio virium fuit, ut non exstinxerit, debilitavit tamen. Sed vel propter hoc nos contumacius erigamus, quod illam ut perferre nobis difficile est, ita facile contemnere. Nihil enim sibi adversus me reliquit et infelicem quidem, sed certissimam tamen 16 attulit mihi ex his malis securitatem. Boni autem consulere nostrum laborem vel propter hoc aequum
 est, quod in nullum iam proprium usum persevera-mus, sed omnis haec cura alienas utilitates (si modo

¹ omnium spes, bracketed by Spalding. avitae, Erasmus:
 acutis or acutae, MSS.: ad poenas amisi, Regius: poenas, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

quid utile scribimus) spectat. Nos miseri sicut facultates patrimonii nostri, ita hoc opus aliis praeparabamus, aliis relinquemus.

I. Peroratio sequebatur, quam cumulum quidam, conclusionem alii vocant. Eius duplex ratio est posita aut in rebus aut in adfectibus. Rerum repetitio et congregatio, quae Graece dicitur ^{ῥῆνῆκετῆρ} ἀνακεφαλαιώσις, a quibusdam Latinorum enumeratio, et memoriam iudicis reficit et totam simul causam ponit ante oculos et, etiamsi per singula minus moverat, 2 turba valet. In hac, quae repetemus, quam brevissime dicenda sunt et, quod Graeco verbo patet, decurrendum per capita. Nam, si morabimur, non iam enumeratio sed quasi altera fiet oratio. Quae autem enumeranda videntur, cum pondere aliquo dicenda sunt et aptis excitanda sententiis et figuris utique varianda; alioqui nihil est odiosius recta illa 3 repetitione velut memoriae iudicum diffidentis. Sunt autem innumerabiles species,¹ optimeque in Verrem Cicero: Si pater ipse iudicaret, quid diceret, cum haec probarentur? et deinde subiecit enumerationem; aut cum

¹ species, added by Halm.

QUINTILIAN

idem in eundem per invocationem deorum spoliata a praetore templa dinumerat. Licet et dubitare, num quid nos fugerit, et quid responsurus sit adversarius
 his et his, aut quam spem accusator habeat omnibus 4 ita defensis. Illa vero iucundissima, si contingat aliquod ex adversario ducere argumentum, ut si dicas: Reliquit hanc partem causae, aut invidia premere maluit, aut ad preces confugit merito, cum sciret haec et 5 haec. Sed non sunt singulae species persequendae, ne sola videantur, quae forte nunc dixero, cum occa-
 siones et ex causis et ex dictis adversariorum et ex quibusdam fortuitis quoque oriantur. Nec referenda modo nostra, sed postulandum etiam ab adversariis, 6 ut ad quaedam respondeant. Id autem, si et actioni supererit locus et ea proposuerimus, quae refelli non possint. Nam provocare quae inde sint fortia, non 7 arguentis est, sed monentis. Id unum epilogi genus visum est plerisque Atticorum et philosophis fere omnibus, qui de arte oratoria scriptum aliquid reli-

¹ ib. lxxii.

QUINTILIAN

- querunt. Id sensisse Atticos credo, quia Athenis adfectus movére etiam per praeconem prohibebátur orator. Philosophos minús miror, apud quos vitii loco est adfici; nec boni mores videntur, sic a vero iudicem averti, nec convenire bono viro vitiis uti. Necessarios tamen adfectus fatebuntur, si aliter obtineri vera et iusta et in commune profutura non
- 8 possint. Ceterum illud constitit inter omnes, etiam in aliis partibus actionis, si multiplex causa sit et pluribus argumentis defensa, utiliter ἀνακεφαλαίωσιν fieri solere, sicut nemo dubitáverit multas esse causas, in quibus nullo loco sit necessaria, si breves et simplices fuérint. Haec pars perorationis accusatori patronoque ex aequo communis est.
- 9 Adfectibus quoque iisdem fere utuntur, sed aliis hic, aliis¹ ille saepius ac magis, nam huic concitare iudices, illi flectere convénit. Verum et accusator habet interim lacrimas ex miseratione eius rei quam ulciscitur; et reus de indignitate calumniae aut con-
- ¹ aliis, Spalding: aut, AG.

¹ Athenaeus (xiii. 6, 590 E) states that a law against appeals to the emotions was passed at Athens after Hippias' defence of Phryne (see II. xv. 9.). But there is no real evidence for the existence of such a law save in cases tried before the Areopagus (see Arist. Rhet. I. i. 5). Appeals for pity were as freely employed in the ordinary courts of Athens during the fourth century as at Rome. When Xenophon (Mem. IV. iv. 4) says that Socrates refused to beg mercy of his judges contrary to the law, he seems to refer to the spirit, not the letter.

QUINTILIAN

spirationis vehementius interim queritur. Dividere igitur haec officia commodissimum, quae plerumque sunt, ut dixi, in prooemio similia, sed hic liberiora ple-
10 nioraque. Inclinationis enim iudicum ad nos petitur initio parcius, cum admitti satis est et oratio tota superest; in epilogo vero est, qualem animum iudex in consilium ferat, et iam nihil amplius dicturi sumus nec
11 restat quo reservemus. Est igitur utrisque commune, conciliare sibi, avertere ab adversario iudicem, concitare adfectus et componere. Et brevissimum quidem hoc praeceptum dari utrique parti potest, ut totas causae suae vires orator ponat ante oculos; et cum viderit, quid invidiosum, favorabile, invisum, miserabile aut sit in rebus aut videri possit, ea dicat, quibus, si iudex esset, ipse maxime moveretur.
12 Sed certius est ire per singula.

Et quae concilient quidem accusatorem, in praeceptis exordii iam diximus. Quaedam tamen, quae illic ostendere sat est, in peroratione implenda sunt magis, si contra impotentem, invisum, perniciosum suscepta causa est, si iudicibus ipsis aut gloriae dam-

¹ IV. i. 27, 28.

² IV. i. 5 sq.

QUINTILIAN

- 13 natio rei aut deformitati futura absolutio. Nam egregie in Vatinius Calvus, Factum, inquit, ambitum scitis omnes et hoc vos scire omnes sciunt. Cicero quidem in Verrem etiam emendari posse infamiam iudiciorum damnato reo dicit; quod est unum ex supra dictis. Metus etiam, si est adhibendus, ut faciat idem, hunc habet locum fortiolem quam in prooemio. Qua de re quid sentirem, alio iam libro
- 14 exposui. Concitare quoque invidiam, odium, iram, liberius in peroratione contingit; quorum invidiam gratia, odium turpitudine, iram offensio iudici facit, si contumax, arrogans, securus sit, quae non ex facto modo dictove aliquo sed vultu, habitu, aspectu moveri solet. Egregieque nobis adolescentibus dixisse accusator Cossutiani Capitonis videbatur, Graece quidem, sed in hunc sensum, Erubescis Caesarem
- 15 timere. Summa tamen concitandi adfectus accusatori in hoc est, ut id, quod obicit, aut quam atrocissimum aut etiam, si fieri potest, quam maxime miserabile esse videatur. Atrocitas crescit ex his, quid factum sit, a quo, in quem, quo animo, quo

¹ I. xv. 43.

² IV. i. 20, 21.

³ See Tac. Ann. xiii. 33. Cossutianus was condemned for extortion in his province. His accuser is not known.

QUINTILIAN

tempore, quo loco, quo modo; quae omnia infinitos 16 tractatus habent. Pulsatum querimur: de re primum ipsa dicendum; tum si senex, si puer, si magis-tratus, si probus, si bene de re publica meritus;
 etiam si percussus sit a vili aliquo contemptoque vel
 ex contrario a potente nimium vel ab eo, quo minime
 oportuit, et si die forte sollemni aut iis temporibus, cum iudicia eius rei maxime exercerentur, aut in sollicito civitatis statu; item in theatro, in templo, 17 in contione, crescit invidia; et si non errore nec ira vel etiam, si forte ira, sed iniqua, quod patri adfuis-set, quod respondisset, quod honores contra peteret,
 et si plus etiam videri potest voluisse quam fecit.
 Plurimum tamen adfert atrocitatis modus, si graviter,
 si contumeliose: ut Demosthenes ex parte percussi corporis, ex vultu ferientis, ex habitu invidiam Midiae 18 quaerit. Occisus utrum ferro an igne an veneno, uno vulnere an pluribus, subito an expectatione

¹ in Mid. 72.

QUINTILIAN

tortus, ad hanc partem maxime pertinet. Utitur frequenter accusator et miseratione, cum aut eius casum, quem ulciscitur, aut liberorum ac parentum 19 solitudinem conqueritur. Etiam futuri temporis imagine iudices movet, quae maneant eos, qui de vi et iniuria questi sunt, nisi vindicentur; fugiendum de civitate, cedendum bonis aut omnia, quaecunque 20 inimicus fecerit, perferenda. Sed saepius id est accusatoris, avertere iudicem a miseratione, qua reus sit usus, atque ad fortiter iudicandum concitare. Cuius loci est etiam occupare, quae dicturum facturumve adversarium putes. Nam et cautiores ad custodiam suae religionis iudices facit et gratiam responsuris aufert, cum ea quae dicta sunt ab accusatore iam, si pro reo repetentur, non sint nova: ut Servium Sulpicium Messala contra Aufidiam, ne signatorum, ne ipsius discrimen obiciatur sibi, praemonet. Nec non ab Aeschine, quali sit usus Demosthenes actione, praedictum est. Docendi quoque interim iudices, quid rogantibus respondere debeant; quod est unum repetitionis genus.

21 Periclitantem vero commendat dignitas et studia

¹ cp. iv. ii. 106. See note prefixed to Index,

² in Ctes. 207.

QUINTILIAN

fortia et susceptae bello cicatrices et nobilitas et merita maiorum. Hoc, quod proxime dixi, Cicero atque Asinius certatim sunt usi, pro Scauro patre hic 22 ille pro filio. Commendat et causa periculi, si suscepisse inimicitias ob aliquod factum honestum videtur; praecipue bonitas, humanitas, misericordia. Iustius enim tunc petere ea quisque videtur a iudice, quae aliis ipse praestiterit. Referenda pars haec quoque ad utilitatem rei publicae, ad iudicum gloriam,
23 ad exemplum, ad memoriam posteritatis. Plurimum tamen valet miseratio, quae iudicem non flecti tantum cogit, sed motum quoque animi sui lacrimis confiteri. Haec petentur aut ex iis, quae passus est reus, aut iis quae cum maxime patitur, aut iis quae damnatum manent; quae et ipsa duplicantur, cum dicimus ex 24 qua illi fortuna et in quam recidendum sit. Adfert in his momentum et aetas et sexus et pignora; liberi, dico, et parentes et propinqui. Quae omnia tractari

¹ See IV. i. 69.

QUINTILIAN

varie solent. Nonnunquam etiam ipse patronus has partes subit, ut Cicero pro Milone, O me miserum ! o te infelicem ! Revocare me tu in patriam, Milo, potuisti per hos, ego te in patria per eosdem relinere non potero ? Maximeque, si, ut tunc accidit, non conveniunt ei qui 25 accusatur preces. Nam quis ferret Milonem pro capite suo supplicantem, qui a se virum nobilem interfectum, quia id fieri oportuisset, fateretur ? Ergo et illi captavit ex ipsa praestantia animi favorem et in locum lacrimarum eius ipse successit.

His praecipue locis utiles sunt ~~prospopoeiae~~, id est fictae alienarum personarum orationes, quales litigatorum ore dicit patronus. Nudae tantum res movent ; at cum ipsos loqui fingimus, ex personis
26 quoque trahitur adfectus. Non enim audire iudex videtur aliena mala deflentis, sed sensum ac vocem auribus accipere miserorum, quorum etiam mutus aspectus lacrimas movet ; quantoque essent miserabiliora, si ea dicerent ipsi, tanto sunt quadam portione ad adficiendum potentiora, cum velut ipsorum ore

¹ xxxvii. 102.

QUINTILIAN

dicuntur, ut scenicis actoribus eadem vox eademque pronuntiatio plus ad movendos adfectus sub persona 27 valet. Itaque idem Cicero, quanquam preces non dat Miloni, eumque potius animi praestantia commendat, accommodavit tamen ei verba, convenientes etiam forti viro conquestiones: Frustra, inquit, mei suscepti labores! O spes fallaces! O cogitationes inanes meas!

Nunquam tamen debet esse longa miseratio, nec sine causa dictum est, nihil facilius quam lacrimas
28 inarescere. Nam cum etiam veros dolores mitiget tempus, citius evanescat necesse est illa, quam dicendo effinximus, imago; in qua si moramur, lacrimis fatigatur auditor et requiescit et ab illo, quem
29 ceperat, impetu ad rationem redit. Non patiamur igitur frigescere hoc opus, et adfectum, cum ad summum perduxerimus, relinquamus nec speremus fore ut aliena quisquam diu ploret. Ideoque cum in aliis tum maxime in hac parte debet crescere oratio, quia, quidquid non adiicit prioribus, etiam deträhere videtur, et facile deficit adfectus qui descendit.

30 Non solum autem dicendo sed etiam faciendo quaedam lacrimas movemus, unde et producere ipsos,

¹ pro Mil. xxxiv. 94.

² A quotation from the rhetorician Apollonius, cp. Cic. de Inv. i. 56.

QUINTILIAN

qui periclitentur, squalidos atque deformes et liberos eorum ac parentes institutum, et ab accusatoribus cruentum gladium ostendi et lecta e vulneribus ossa et vestes sanguine perfusas videmus, et vulnera
 31 resolvi, verberata corpora nudari. Quarum rerum ingens plerumque vis est velut in rem praesentem animos hominum ducentium, ut populum Romanum egit in furorem praetexta C. Caesaris praelata in funere cruenta. Sciebat interfectum eum, corpus denique ipsum impositum lecto erat, at vestis tamen illa sanguine madens ita repraesentavit imaginem sceleris, ut non occisus esse Caesar sed tum maxime
 32 occidi videretur. Sed non ideo probaverim, quod factum et lego et ipse aliquando vidi, depictam in tabula sipariove¹ imaginem rei, cuius atrocitate iudex erat commovendus. Quae enim est actoris infantia, qui mutam illam effigiem magis quam orationem pro se 33 putet locuturam? At sordes et squalorem et propinquorum quoque similem habitum scio profuisse, et magnum ad salutem momentum preces attulisse. Quare et obsecratio illa iudicum per carissima pig-

¹ sipariove, F. C. Conradus: supra Iovem, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

- nora, utique si et reo sint liberi, coniux, parentes, 34 utilis erit; et deorum etiam invocatio velut ex bona conscientia profecta videri solet; stratum denique iacere et genua complecti, nisi si tamen persona nos
 et anteacta vita et rei condicio prohibebit; quaedam enim tam fortiter tuenda quam facta sunt. Verum sic habenda est auctoritatis ratio, ne sit invisă securi-35 tas. Fuit quondam inter haec omnia potentissimum, quo L. Murenam Cicero accusantibus clarissimis viris eripuisse praecipue videtur, persuasitque nihil esse
 ad praesentem rerum statum utilius quam pridie Kalendas Ianuarias ingredi consulatum. Quod genus nostris temporibus totum paene sublatum est, cum omnia curae tutelaeque unius innixa periclitari nullo iudicii exitu possint.
- 36 De accusatoribus et reis sum locutus, quia in peri-culis maxime versatur adfectus. Sed privatae quoque causae utrumque habent perorationis genus, et illud quod est ex enumeratione probationum, et hoc quod
 ex lacrimis, si aut statu periclitari aut opinione litigator videtur. Nam in parvis quidem litibus has

¹ i.e. although such entreaties are effective, they cannot always be employed. Thus they would have been out of place in the case of Milo, whose character was such that it was necessary to defend him with a boldness worthy of the boldness required to perform the deed of which he was accused. Still we must not carry such methods (e.g. such as Cicero employs on behalf of Milo) too far.

QUINTILIAN

tragoedias movere tale est, quasi si personam Herculis et cothurnos aptare infantibus velis.

- 37 Ne illud quidem indignum est admonitione, ingens in epilogis meo iudicio verti discrimen, quomodo se dicenti, qui excitatur, accommodet. Nam et imperitia et rusticitas et rigor et deformitas adferunt interim frigus, diligenterque sunt haec actori provi-
- 38 denda. Equidem repugnantes eos patrono et nihil vultu commotos et intempestive renidentes¹ et facto aliquo vel ipsò vultu risum etiam moventes saepe vidi; praecipue vero cum aliqua velut scenice fiunt, alio
- 39 cadunt.² Transtulit aliquando patronus puellam, quae soror esse adversarii dicebatur (nam de hoc lis erat), in adversa subsellia, tanquam in gremio fratris relicturus, at is a nobis praemonitus discesserat. Tum ille, alioqui vir facundus, inopinatae rei casu obmutuit et infantem suam frigidissime reportavit.
- 40 Alius imaginem mariti pro rea proferre magni putavit, et ea saepius risum fecit. Nam et ii, quorum officium erat ut traderent eam, ignari, qui esset epilo-

¹ renidentes, Spalding: residentes, AG.

² alio, Halm: aliam, alia, alias, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

41 gus, quotiens respexisset patronus, offerébant palam, et prolata novissime deformitate ipsa (nam senis cadaveri cera¹ erat infusa) praeteritam quoque orationis gratiam perdidit. Nec ignótum, quid Glyconi, cui Spiridion fuit cognómen, acciderit. Huic puer, quem is productum quid fleret interrogábat, a paedagogo se vellicari respondit. Sed nihil illa circa 42 Cepasios Ciceronis fabula efficacius ad pericula epi-logorum. Omnia tamen haec tolerabilia iis, quibus actionem mutare facile est; at, qui a stilo non rece-dunt, aut conticescunt ad hos casus aut frequentissime falsa dicunt. Inde est enim, Tendit ad genua vestra supplices manus, et Haeret in complexu liberorum miser, et Revocat ecce me, etiamsi nihil horum is, de quo 43 dicitur, faciat. Ex schólis haec vitia, in quibus omnia libere fingimus et impune, quia pro facto est quidquid
 voluimus; non admittit hoc idem veritas, egregieque Cassius dicenti adolescentulo: Quid me torvo vultu intueris, Severe? Non mehercule, inquit, faciebam, sed si sic scripsisti, ecce! et quam potuit truculentissime 44 eum aspexit. Illud praecipue monendum, ne quis

¹ cadaveri cera, Halm: caduca veri, AG.

¹ pro Cluent. xx. sqq. cp. Quint. vi. iii. 40.

QUINTILIAN

nisi summis ingenii viribus ad movendas lacrimas aggredi audeat; nam ut est longe vehementissimus hic, cum invaluit, adfectus, ita, si nihil efficit, tepet; quem melius infirmus actor tacitis iudicum cogitationibus reliquisset. Nam et vultus et vox et ipsa illa excitati rei facies ludibrio etiam plerumque sunt hominibus, quos non permoverunt. Quare metiatur ac diligenter aestimet vires suas actor et quantum onus subiturus sit intelligat; nihil habet ista res medium, sed aut lacrimas meretur aut risum.

46 Non autem commovere tantum miserationem sed etiam discutere epilogi est proprium cum oratione continua, quae motos lacrimis iudices ad iustitiam reducat, tum etiam quibusdam urbane dictis, quale est Date puero panem, ne ploret; et corpulento litigatori, cuius adversarius, item puer, circa iudices erat ab advocato latus: Quid faciam? ego te baiulare non

47 possum. Sed haec tamen non debent esse mimica. Itaque nec illum probaverim, quanquam inter clarissimos sui temporis oratores fuit, qui pueris in epilogum productis talos iecit in medium, quos illi diripere coeperunt; namque haec ipsa discriminis sui igno-

QUINTILIAN

- 48 rantia potuit esse miserabilis; neque illum, qui, cum esset cruentus gladius ab accusatore prolatus, quo is hominem probabat occisum, subito ex subselliis ut territus fugit et, capite ex parte velato cum ad agendum ex turba prospexisset, interrogavit, an iam ille cum gladio recessisset. Fecit enim risum, sed ridiculus fuit. Discutiendae tamen oratione eiusmodi scenae, egregieque Cicero, qui contra imaginem Saturnini pro Rabirio graviter et contra iuvenem, cuius subinde vulnus in iudicio resolvebatur, pro Vareno multa dixit urbane.
- 50 Sunt et illi leniores epilogi, quibus adversario satisfacimus, si forte sit eius persona talis, ut illi debeatur reverentia, aut cum amice aliquid commovemus et ad concordiam hortamur. Quod est genus egregie tractatum a Passieno, cum Domitiae uxoris suae pecuniaria lite adversus fratrem eius Ahenobarbum ageret; nam, cum de necessitudine multa dixisset, de fortuna quoque, qua uterque abundabat, adiecit: Nihil vobis minus deest, quam de quo contenditis.
- 51 Omnes autem hos adfectus, etiamsi quibusdam

¹ cp. pro Rab. ix. 24.

QUINTILIAN

videntur in prooemio atque in epilogo sedem habere,
in quibus sane sint frequentissimi, tamen aliae quo-
que partes recipiunt, sed breviores, ut cum ex iis plurima sint reservanda.¹ At hic, si usquam, totos 52 eloquentiae aperire fontes licet. Nam et, si bene diximus reliqua, possidebimus iam iudicum animos, et e confragosis atque asperis evecti tota pandere possumus vela, et, cum sit maxima pars epilogi amplificatio, verbis atque sententiis uti licet magnificis et ornatis. Tunc est commovendum theatrum, cum ventum est ad ipsum illud, quo veteres tragoediae comoediaeque cluduntur, Plodite.

53 In aliis autem partibus tractandus erit adfectus, ut quisque nascetur, nam neque exponi sine hoc res
atroces et miserabiles debent; cum de qualitate alicuius rei quaestio est, probationibus uniuscuiusque 54 rei recte subiungitur. Ubi vero coniunctam ex pluri-bus causam agimus, etiam necesse erit uti pluribus quasi epilogis, ut in Verrem Cicero fecit. Nam et Philodamo et nauarchis et cruci civis Romani et aliis 55 plurimis suas lacrimas dedit. Sunt, qui hos μερικὸνς
ἐπιλόγους vocent, quo partitam perorationem significant. Mihi non tam partes eius quam species videntur, siquidem et epilogi et perorationis nomina ipsa aperte satis ostendunt, hanc esse consummationem orationis.

¹ sint reservanda, Early editors : sit res eruenda, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

- res* X II. Quamvis autem pars haec iudicialium causarum summa praecipueque constet adfectibus, et aliqua de iis necessario dixerim, non tamen potui ac ne debui quidem istum locum in unam speciem concludere. Quare adhuc opus superest, cum ad obtinenda quae volumus potentissimum, tum supradictis multo difficilius, movendi iudicum animos atque in eum quem volumus habitum formandi et velut transfigurandi.
- 2 Qua de re pauca, quae postulabat materia, sic attigi, ut magis quid oporteret fieri quam quo id modo consequi possemus, ostenderem. Nunc altius omnis rei repetenda ratio est.

- Nam et per totam, ut diximus, causam locus est adfectibus, et eorum non simplex natura nec in transitu tractanda, quo nihil adferre maius vis orandi
- 3 potest. Nam cetera forsitan tenuis quoque et angusta ingenii vena, si modo vel doctrina vel usu sit adiuta, generare atque ad frugem aliquam perducere queat; certe sunt semperque fuerunt non parum

¹ VI. i. 51.

QUINTILIAN

multi, qui satis perite, quae essent probationibus utilia, reperirent; quos eūdem non contemno, sed hactenus utiles credo, ne quid per eos iudici sit ignotum, atque (ut dicam, quod sentio) dignos, a quibus causam disertī docerentur. ~~Qui~~ Qui vero iudicem rapere et, in quem vellet habitum animi, posset perducere, quo dicente¹ flendum irascendumve esset, 4 rarus fuit. Atqui hoc est quod dominetur in iudiciis, haec eloquentia regnat.² Namque argumenta plerumque nascuntur ex causa, et pro meliore parte plura sunt semper, ut, qui per haec vicit, tantum non 5 defuisse sibi advocatum sciat. Ubi vero animis iudicum vis adferenda est et ab ipsa veri contemplatione abducenda mens, ibi proprium oratoris opus est. Hoc non docet litigator, hoc causarum libellis non continetur. Probationes enim efficiant sane ut causam nostram meliorem esse iudices putent, adfectus praestant ut etiam velint; sed id quod volunt cre- 6 dunt quoque. Nam cum irasci, favere, odisse, misereri coeperunt, agi iam rem suam existimant; et, sicut amantes de forma iudicare non possunt, quia

¹ dicente, Spalding: dicto, MSS.

² eloquentia regnat, Halm: eloquentiam regunt, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

- sensum oculorum praecipit animus, ita omnem veritatis inquirendae rationem iudex omittit occupatus adfectibus; aestu fertur et velut rapido flumini obse-
- 7 quitur. Ita argumenta ac testes quid egerint, pronuntiatio ostendit; commotus autem ab oratore iudex, quid sentiat, sedens adhuc atque audiens confitetur. An cum ille, qui plerisque perorationibus petitur, fletus erumpit, non palam dicta sententia est? Huc igitur incumbat orator, hoc opus, hic labor est, sine quo cetera nuda, ieiuna, infirma, ingrata sint; adeo velut spiritus operis huius atque animus est in adfectibus.
- 8 Horum autem, sicut antiquitus traditum accepimus, duae sunt species: alteram Graeci πάθος vocant, quod nos vertentes recte ac proprie adfectum dicimus, alteram ἦθος, cuius nomine, ut ego quidem sentio, caret sermo Romanus; mores appellantur, atque inde pars quoque illa philosophiae ἠθικὴ moralis
- 9 est dicta. Sed ipsam rei naturam spectanti mihi non tam mores significari videntur quam morum quaedam proprietas; nam ipsis quidem omnis habitus mentis continetur. Cautiores voluntatem complecti quam nomina interpretari maluerunt. Adfectus igi-

¹ Aen. vi. 128.

QUINTILIAN

tur πάθος concitatos, *ἥθος*¹ mites atque compositos esse dixerunt; in altero vehementer commotos, in altero lenes; denique hos imperare, illos persuadere; hos ad perturbationem, illos ad benivolentiam praevalere.

- 10 Adiciunt quidam ἥθος perpetuum,² πάθος temporale esse. Quod ut accidere frequentius fateor, ita nonnullas credo esse materias, quae continuum desiderent adfectum. Nec tamen minus artis aut usus hi leniores habent, virium atque impetus non tantundem exigunt. In causis vero etiam pluribus versantur, immo secundum quendam intellectum in
- 11 omnibus. Nam cum ex illo ethico³ loco nihil, non ab oratore tractetur, quidquid de honestis et utilibus, denique faciendis et non faciendis dicitur, ἥθος vocari potest. Quidam commendationem atque excusationem propria huius officii putaverunt, nec abnuo esse ista in hac parte; sed non concedo ut sola sint.
- 12 Quin illud adhuc adiicio, πάθος atque ἥθος esse interrim ex eadem natura, ita ut illud maius sit, hoc minus, ut amor πάθος, caritas ἥθος; interdum diversa inter se, sicut in epilogis, nam quae πάθος concitavit, ἥθος solet mitigare. Proprie tamen mihi huius nominis exprimenda natura est, quatenus appellatione
- 13 ipsa non satis significari videtur. ἥθος, quod intelligimus quodque a dicentibus desideramus, id erit, quod ante omnia bonitate commendabitur, non solum

¹ πάθος . . . ἥθος, excerpts of Cassiodorus with slight alteration of order: hos . . . illos, MSS.

² ἥθος perpetuum, excerpts of Cassiodorus: hoc pertuum, A: aut pertuum, G; peritorium, codd. dett.

³ ethico, Halm: et hoc, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

mite ac placidum, sed plerumque blandum et humanum et audientibus amabile atque iucundum, in quo exprimendo summa virtus ea est, ut fluere omnia ex natura rerum hominumque videantur utque mores dicentis ex oratione perluceant et quodammodo ag-14 noscantur. Quod est sine dubio inter coniunctas maxime personas, quotiens ferimus, ignoscimus, satisfacimus, monemus, procul ab ira, procul ab odio. Sed tamen alia patris adversus filium, tutoris adversus pupillum, mariti adversus uxorem moderatio est (hi enim praeferunt eorum ipsorum, a quibus laeduntur, caritatem, neque alio modo invisos eos faciunt quam quod amare ipsi videntur), alia, cum senex adolescentis alieni convicium, honestus inferioris fert; hic enim tantum concitari, illic etiam
 15 adfici debet. Sunt et illa ex eadem natura, sed motus adhuc minoris, veniam petere adulescentiae, defendere amores. Nonnunquam etiam lenis calor alieni derisus ex hac forma venit, sed his non ex locis tantum. Verum aliquanto magis propria fuit virtus simulationis, satisfaciendi rogandi εἰρωνεία, quae
 16 diversum ei quod dicit intellectum petit. Hinc etiam

QUINTILIAN

ille maior ad concitandum odium nasci adfectus solet, cum hoc ipso, quod nos adversariis summittimus, intelligitur tacita impotentiae exprobratio. Namque eos graves et intolerabiles id ipsum demonstrat, quod cedimus, et ignorant cupidi maledicendi aut adfectatores libertatis plus invidiam quam convicium posse; nam invidia adversarios, convicium nos invisos facit.

17 Ille iam paene medius adfectus est ex amoribus et ex desideriis amicorum et necessariorum, nam et hoc maior est et illo minor. Non parum significanter etiam illa in scholis ἡθῆ dixerimus, quibus plerumque rusticos, superstitiosos, avaros, timidos secundum condicionem propositionum effingimus. Nam si ἡθῆ mores sunt cum hos imitamur, ex his ducimus orationem.

18 Denique ἡθὸς¹ omne bonum et comem virum poscit. Quas virtutes cum etiam in litigatore debeat orator, si fieri potest, approbare, utique ipse aut habeat aut habere credatur. Sic proderit plurimum causis, quibus ex sua bonitate faciet fidem. Nam qui, dum dicit, malus videtur, utique male dicit; non enim videtur iusta dicere, alioqui ἡθὸς videretur.

19 Quare ipsum etiam dicendi genus in hoc placidum debet esse ac mite; nihil superbum, nihil elatum

¹ ἡθὸς, Meister: hoc MSS.

¹ cp. I. ix. 3.

QUINTILIAN

saltem ac sublime desiderat; proprie, iucunde, credibiliter dicere sat est, ideoque et medius ille orationis modus maxime convenit.

- 20 Diversum est huic, quod πάθος dicitur, quodque nos adfectum proprie vocamus; et, ut proxime utriusque differentiam signem, illud comoediae, hoc tragoediae magis simile. Haec pars circa iram, odium, metum, invidiam, miserationem fere tota versatur. Quae quibus ex locis ducenda sint, et manifestum omnibus et a nobis in ratione prooemii atque epilogi dictum est.
- 21 Et metum tamen duplicem intelligi volo, quem patimur et quem facimus, et invidiam; namque altera invidum, altera invidiosum facit. Hoc autem hominis, illud rei est; in quo et plus habet operis oratio. Nam quaedam videntur gravia per se, parricidium, caedes, 22 veneficium; quaedam efficienda sunt. Id autem contingit, cum magnis alioqui malis gravius esse id quod passi sumus, ostenditur; quale est apud Virgilium:

*O felix una ante alias Priameia virgo,
Hostilem ad tumulum Troiae sub moenibus altis Iussu mori—*

(quam miser enim casus Andromachae, si comparata

¹ i.e. the style intermediate between the restrained (Attic) and the grand (Asiatic) style.

² IV. i and VI. i.

³ Aen. iii. 321.

QUINTILIAN

- 23 ei felix Polyxena); aut cum ita exaggeramus iniuriam nostram, ut etiam quae multo minora sunt intoleranda dicamus: Si pulsasses, defendi non poteras; vulnerasti. Sed haec diligentius, cum de amplificatione dicemus.¹ Interim notasse contentus sum, non id solum agere adfectus, ut, quae sunt, ostendantur acerba ac luctuosa, sed etiam ut, quae toleranda haberi solent, gravia videantur: ut cum in maledicto plus iniuriae quam in manu, in infamia plus poenae
- 24 dicimus quam in morte. Namque in hoc eloquentiae vis est, ut iudicem non in id tantum compellat, in quod ipsa rei natura ducetur, sed aut, qui non est, aut maiorem quam est, faciat adfectum. Haec est illa, quae δεινότης vocatur, rebus indignis, asperis, invidiosis addens vim oratio; qua virtute praeter alias plurimum Demosthenes valuit.
- 25 Quodsi tradita mihi sequi praecepta sufficeret satisfeceram huic parti, nihil eorum quae legi vel didici, quod modo probabile fuit, omittendo; sed eruere in animo est quae latent, et penitus ipsa huius loci aperire penetrabilia, quae quidem non aliquo tradente, sed experimento meo ac natura ipsa duce accepi.
- 26 Summa enim, quantum ego quidem sentio, circa

¹ de amplificatione dicemus, Halm: ad eam amplificationem dicemus, AG: ad eam amplificationem venerimus, dicemus, vulgo.

¹ VIII. iv. 9.

² Lit. "making terrible."

QUINTILIAN

- movēdos adfectus in hoc posita est, ut moveamur ipsi. Nam et luctus et irae et indignationis aliquando etiam ridicula fuerit imitatio, si verba vultumque tantum, non etiam animum accommodārimus. Quid enim aliud est causae, ut lugētes utique in recenti dolore disertissime quaedam exclamare videantur et ira nonnunquam indoctis quoque eloquentiam faciat, quam quod illis inest vis mentis et veritas ipsa morum?
- 27 Quare in iis, quae esse verisimilia volēmus, simus ipsi similes eorum qui vere patiuntur adfectibus, et a tali animo profisciscatur oratio qualem facere iudicem volet. An ille dolēbit, qui audiet me, qui in hoc dicam, non dolentem? irascētur, si nihil ipse, qui in iram concitat se idque exigit, similia patiētur? siccis agentis
- 28 oculis lacrimas dabit? Fieri non potest. Nec incendit nisi ignis nec madescimus nisi humore nec res ulla dat alteri colorem quem non ipsa habet. Primum est igitur, ut apud nos valeant ea quae valere apud iudicem volumus, adficiamurque antequam adficere
- 29 conemur. At quomodo fiet, ut adficiamur? neque enim sunt motus in nostra potestate. Temptabo etiam de hoc dicere. Quas φαντασίας Graeci vocant, nos sane visiones appellemus, per quas imagines rerum absentium ita repraesentantur animo, ut eas cernere

QUINTILIAN

- 30 oculis ac praesentes habere videamur. Has quisquis bene conceperit, is erit in adfectibus potentissimus. Hunc quidam dicunt εὐφραντισίωτον, qui sibi res, voces, actus secundum verum optime finget; quod quidem nobis volentibus facile continget. Nisi¹ vero inter otia animorum et spes inanes et velut somnia quaedam vigilantium ita nos hae de quibus loquor imagines prosequuntur, ut peregrinari, navigare, proeliari, populos alloqui, divitiarum, quas non habemus, usum videamur disponere, nec cogitare sed facere: hoc
- 31 animi vitium ad utilitatem non transferemus? At hominem occisum queror; non omnia, quae in re praesenti accidisse credibile est, in oculis habebo? non percussor ille subitus erumpet? non expavescet circumventus? exclamabit vel rogabit vel fugiet? non ferientem, non concidentem videbo? non animo sanguis et pallor et gemitus extremus, denique expirantis hiatus insidet?
- 32 Insequitur ἐνάργεια, quae a Cicerone illustratio et evidentia nominatur, quae non tam dicere videtur quam ostendere; et adfectus non aliter, quam si

¹ nisi, Törnebladh: nihil, AG.

¹ Perhaps an allusion to Part. Or. vi. 20. ἐνάργεια = clearness.

QUINTILIAN

rebus ipsis intersimus, sequentur. An non ex his visionibus illa sunt; Excussi manibus radii, revolutaque
 33 pensa?—Levique patens in pectore vulnus? equus ille in funere Pallantis,—positis insignibus? Quid? non idem poeta penitus ultimi fati concepit imaginem, ut
 34 diceret: Et dulces moriens reminiscitur Argos? Ubi vero miseratione opus erit, nobis ea, de quibus queremur, accidisse credamus atque id animo nostro persuadeamus. Nos illi simus, quos gravia, indigna, tristia passos queremur, nec agamus rem quasi alienam, sed adsumamus parumper illum dolorem. Ita dicemus, 35 quae in nostro simili casu dicturi fuissetus.¹ Vidi ego saepe histriones atque comoedos, cum ex aliquo graviore actu personam deposuissent, flentes adhuc egredi. Quodsi in alienis scriptis sola pronuntiatio ita falsis accendit adfectibus, quid nos faciemus, qui illa cogitare debemus ut moveri periclitantium vice 36 possimus? Sed in schola quoque rebus ipsis adfici convenit easque veras sibi fingere, hoc magis quod

¹ fuissetus, Halm: vidissetus, AG.

¹ Aen. ix. 474.

² ib. xi. 89

² ib. xi. 40.

³ ib. x. 782.

QUINTILIAN

illic ut litigatores loquimur frequentius quam ut advocati. Orbum agimus et naufragum et periclitantem, quorum induere personas quid attinet, nisi adfectus adsumimus? Haec dissimulanda mihi non fuerunt, quibus ipse, quantuscunque sum aut fui, pervenisse me ad aliquod nomen ingenii credo; frequenter motus sum, ut me non lacrimae solum deprehenderent, sed pallor et veri similis dolor.

III. Huic diversa virtus, quae risum iudicis movendo et illos tristes solvit adfectus et animum ab intentione rerum frequenter avertit et aliquando etiam reficit et a satietate vel a fatigatione renovat. Quanta sit autem in ea difficultas, vel duo maxime oratores, alter Graecae alter Latinae eloquentiae principes, docent. Nam plerique Demostheni facultatem defuisse huius rei credunt, Ciceroni modum. Nec videri potest noluisse Demosthenes, cuius pauca admodum dicta nec sane ceteris eius virtutibus respondentia palam ostendunt, non displicuisse illi iocos, sed non contigisse. Noster vero non solum extra iudicia, sed in ipsis etiam orationibus habitus est nimius risus adfectator. Mihi quidem, sive id recte iudico sive amore immodico praecipui in elo-

438

QUINTILIAN

quentia viri labor, mira quaedam in eo videtur fuisse 4 urbanitas. Nam et in sermone cotidiāno multa et in altercationibus et interrogandis testibus plura quam quisquam dixit facēte, et ipsa illa, quae sunt in Verrem dicta frigīdus, aliis adsignavit et testimonii loco posuit; ut, quo sunt magis vulgaria, eo sit cre-dibilius illa ab oratore non ficta sed passim esse 5 iactata. Utinamque libertus eius Tiro aut alius, quisquis fuit, qui tris hac de re libros edidit, parcius dictorum numero indulsissent et plus iudicii in eli-gendis quam in congerendis studii adhibuissent:
 minus obiectus calumniantibus foret, qui tamen nunc
 quoque, ut in omni eius ingenio, facilius, quod reiici
 6 quam quod adiici possit, invenient. Adfert autem summam rei difficultatem primum, quod ridiculum dictum plerumque falsum est (hoc semper humile), saepe ex industria depravatum, praeterea nunquam
 honorificum; tum varia hominum iudicia in eo, quod non ratione aliqua sed motu animi quodam nescio an 7 enarrabili iudicatur. Neque enim ab ullo satis explicari puto, licet multi temptaverint, unde risus, qui non solum facto aliquo dictove, sed interdum quodam etiam corporis tactu lacessitur. Praeterea non una ratione moveri solet, neque enim acute tantum ac
 venuste sed stulte, iracunde, timide dicta aut facta

QUINTILIAN

ridentur; ideoque anceps eius rei ratio est, quod a 8 derisu non procul abest risus. Habet enim, ut Cicero dicit, sedem in deformitate aliqua et turpitudine, quae cum in aliis demonstrantur, urbanitas, cum in ipsos dicentes recidunt, stultitia vocatur.

fm Cum videatur autem res levis et quae ab scurris,
mimis, insipientibus denique saepe moveatur, tamen
habet vim nescio an imperiosissimam et cui repug-9 nari minime potest. Erupt etiam invitis saepe, nec vultus modo ac vocis exprimit confessionem, sed
totum corpus vi sua concutit. Rerum autem saepe (ut dixi) maximarum momenta vertit, ut cum odium
10 iraque frequentissime frangat. Documento sunt iuvenes Tarentini, qui multa de rege Pyrrho sequius inter cenam locuti, cum rationem facti reposceren-
tur et neque negari res neque defendi posset, risu sunt et opportuno ioco elapsi. Namque unus ex iis, Immo, inquit, nisi lagona defecisset, occidissemus te;
eaeque urbanitate tota est invidia criminis dissoluta.
11 Verum hoc, quidquid est, ut non ausim dicere
carere omnino arte, quia nonnullam observationem habet, suntque ad id pertinentia et a Graecis et a

¹ De Or. II. lviii. 236.

² Where?

QUINTILIAN

- 12 Latinis composita praecepta, ita plane adfirmo, prae- cipue positum esse in natura et in occasione. Porro natura non tantum in hoc valet, ut acutior quis atque habilior sit ad inveniendum (nam id sane doctrina possit augeri), sed inest proprius quibusdam decôr in habitu ac vultu, ut eadem illa minus alio dicente 13 urbana esse videantur. Occasio vero et in rebus est
cuius est¹ tanta vis, ut saepe adiuti ea non indocti modo, sed etiam rustici salse dicant, et in eo cum quis aliquid dixerit prior. Sunt enim longe venustiora 14 omnia in respondendo quam in provocando. Accedit
difficultati, quod eius rei nulla exercitatio est, nulli praeceptores. Itaque in conviviiis et sermonibus multi dicâces, quia in hoc usu cotidiano proficimus.
Oratoria urbanitas rara nec ex arte propria sed ad
 15 hanc consuetudinem commodata. Nihil autem
vetabat et componi materias in hoc idoneas, ut controversiae permixtis salibus fingerentur, vel res
proponi singulas ad iuvenum talem exercitationem.
 16 Quin illae ipsae (dicta sunt ac vocantur), quas certis
diebus festae licentiae dicere solebamus, si paulum
adhibita ratione fingerentur, aut aliquid in his serium

¹ cuius est, added by Halm following Spalding.

¹ The meaning of this passage is not clear, and no satisfactory explanation or correction has been suggested.

QUINTILIAN

quoque esset admixtum, plurimum poterant utilitatis adferre; quae nunc iuvenum vel sibi ludentium exercitatio est.

- 17 Pluribus autem nominibus in eadem re vulgo utimur; quae tamen si diducas, suam quandam propriam vim ostendent. Nam et urbanitas dicitur, quae quidem significari video sermonem praeferentem in verbis et sono et usu proprium quendam gustum urbis et sumptam ex conversatione doctorum tacitam eruditionem, denique cui contraria sit rusticitas.
- 18 Venustum esse, quod cum gratia quadam et venere dicatur, apparet. Salsum in consuetudine pro ridiculo tantum accipimus; natura non utique hoc est, quanquam et ridicula oporteat esse salsa. Nam et Cicero omne, quod salsum sit, ait esse Atticorum, non quia sunt maxime ad risum compositi; et Catullus, cum dicit, Nulla est in corpore mica salis, non
- 19 hoc dicit, nihil in corpore eius esse ridiculum. Salsum igitur erit, quod non erit insulsum, velut quoddam simplex orationis condimentum, quod sentitur latente iudicio velut palato, excitatque et a taedio defendit orationem. Sales enim,¹ ut ille in cibis paulo liberalius aspersus, si tamen non sit immodicus; adfert aliquid propriae voluptatis, ita hi quoque in dicendo habent quiddam, quod nobis faciat

¹ sales enim, Spalding: sane tamen, MSS.

¹ Orat. xxvi. 90.

² Cat. lxxxvi. 4.

QUINTILIAN

- audiendi sitim. Facetum quoque non tantum circa 20 ridicula opinor consistere. Neque enim diceret Horatius, facetum carminis genus natura concessum esse Vergilio. Decoris hanc magis et excultae cuiusdam elegantiae appellationem puto. Ideoque in epistolis Cicero haec Bruti refert verba: Ne illi sunt pedes faceti ac delicatius ingredienti molles. Quod con-venit cum illo Horatiano, molle atque facetum Vergilio.
 21 locum vero accipimus, quod est contrarium serio;
 sed hoc nimis angustum,¹ nam et fingere et terrere et promittere interim iocus est. Dicacitas sine dubio
 a dicendo, quod est omni generi commune, ducta
 est, proprie tamen significat sermonem cum risu aliquos incessentem. Ideo Demosthenen urbanum fuisse dicunt, dicacem negant.
 22 Proprium autem materiae, de qua nunc loquimur, est ridiculum, ideoque haec tota disputatio a Graecis περὶ γελοίου inscribitur. Eius prima divisio traditur eadem, quae est omnis orationis, ut sit positum in 23 rebus aut in verbis. Usus, autem maxime triplex; aut enim ex aliis risum petimus aut ex nobis aut ex rebus mediis. Aliena aut reprehendimus aut refu-tamus aut elevamus aut repercutimus aut eludimus.

¹ sed hoc nimis angustum, added by Halm.

¹ Sat. I. x. 44. molle atque facetum / Vergilio adnuerunt gaudentes rure Camenae. ² This letter is lost.

QUINTILIAN

Nostra ridicule indicamus et, ut verbo Ciceronis utar, dicimus aliqua subabsurda. Namque quaedam, quae, si imprudentibus excident, stulta sunt, si
 24 simulamus, venusta creduntur. Tertium est genus, ut idem dicit, in decipiendis expectationibus, dictis aliter accipiendis ceterisque, quae neutram personam
 25 contingunt ideoque a me media dicuntur. Item ridicula aut facimus aut dicimus. Facto risus conciliatur interim admixta gravitate: ut M. Caelius praetor, cum sellam eius curulem consul Isaúricus fregisset, alteram posuit loris intentam; dicebatur autem consul a patre flagris aliquando caesus; interim sine respectu pudoris, ut in illa pyxide Caeliana, quod neque oratori neque ulli viro gravi conveniat.
 26 Idem autem de vultu gestuque ridiculo dictum sit; in quibus est quidem summa gratia, sed maior, cum captare risum non videntur; nihil enim est iis, quae sicut salsa¹ dicuntur, insulsius. Quanquam autem gratiae plurimum dicentis severitas adfert, fitque ridiculum id ipsum, quod qui dicit illa non ridet, est tamen interim et aspectus et habitus oris et gestus

¹ sicut, Gesner: dūt, G: dicenti, A.

¹ de Or. II. lxxi. 289.

² cp. pro Cael. xxix. 69. There is no jest in this passage which lays itself open to such censure. The jest must have consisted in some action on the part of the orator.

QUINTILIAN

- 27 non inurbanus, cum iis modus contingit. Id porro, quod dicitur, aut est lascivum et hilare, qualia A. Galbae pleraque, aut contumeliosum, qualia nuper Iunii Bassi, aut asperum, qualia Cassii Severi, aut
- 28 lene, qualia Domitii Afri. Refert, his ubi quis utatur. Nam in convictibus et cotidiano sermone lasciva humilibus, hilaria omnibus convenient. Laedere nunquam velimus, longeque absit propositum illud potius amicum quam dictum perdendi. In hac quidem pugna forensi malim mihi lenibus uti licere; quanquam¹ et contumeliose et aspere dicere in adversarios permissum est, cum accusare etiam palam et caput alterius iuste petere concessum sit. Sed hic quoque tamen inhumana videri solet fortunae insectatio, vel quod culpa caret vel quod recidere etiam in ipsos, qui obiecerunt, potest. Primum itaque considerandum est, et quis et in qua causa et
- 29 apud quem et in quem et quid dicat. Oratori minime convenit distortus vultus gestusque, quae in mimis rideri solent. Dicacitas etiam scurrilis et scenica huic personae alienissima est. Obscenitas vero non a verbis tantum abesse debet, sed etiam a signifi-

¹ quanquam, Regius: nonnunquam, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

catione. Nam si quando oblici potest, non in ioco 30 exprobranda est. Oratorem praeterea ut dicere
 urbane volo, ita videri adfectare id plane nolo.
 Quapropter ne dicet quidem salse, quotiens poterit,
 et dictum potius aliquando perdet quam minuet 31 auctoritatem. Nec accusatorem autem atroci in causa nec patronum in miserabili iocantem feret quisquam. Sunt etiam iudices quidam tristiores 32 quam ut risum libenter patiantur. Solet interim accidere, ut id quod in adversarium dicimus aut in iudicem conveniat aut in nostrum quoque litigatorem; quanquam aliqui reperiuntur, qui ne id qui-dem, quod in ipsos recidere possit, evitent. Quod fecit Longus Sulpicius, qui, cum ipse foedissimus esset, ait eum, contra quem iudicio liberali adērat, ne faciem quidem habere liberi hominis; cui respondens Domitius Afer, Ex tui, inquit, animi sententia, 33 Longe, qui malam faciem habet, liber non est? Vitan-dum etiam, ne petulans, ne superbum, ne loco, ne tempore alienum, ne praeparatum et domo adlatum videatur quod dicimus. Nam adversus miseros, sicut supra dixeram, inhumanus est iocus. Sed qui-dam ita sunt receptae auctoritatis ac notae verecundiae, ut nocitura sit in eos dicendi petulantia. Nam 34 de amicis iam praeceptum est. Illud non ad oratoris ¹

¹ oratoris, Harster: orat fori, A: orā fori, G.

QUINTILIAN

consilium sed ad hominis pertinet; lacessat hoc modo quem laedere sit periculosum, ne aut inimitiae graves insequantur aut turpis satisfactio. Male etiam dicitur, quod in plures convenit, si aut nationes totae incessantur aut ordines aut condicio aut studia 35 multorum. Ea quae dicet vir bonus omnia salva dignitate ac verecundia dicet. Nimiū enim risus pretium est, si probitatis impendio constat.

Unde autem concilietur risus et quibus ex locis peti soleat, difficillimum dicere. Nam si species omnes persequi velimus, nec modum reperiemus et 36 frustra laborabimus. Neque enim minus numerosi sunt loci, ex quibus haec dicta, quam illi, ex quibus eae, quas sententias vocamus, ducuntur, neque alii. Nam hic quoque est inventio et elocutio, atque ipsius
37 elocutionis vis alia in verbis, alia in figuris. Risus igitur oriuntur aut ex corpore eius, in quem dicimus, aut ex animo, qui factis ab eo dictisque colligitur, aut ex iis, quae sunt extra posita. Intra haec enim est omnis vituperatio; quae si gravius posita sit, severa est, si levius, ridicula. Haec aut ostenduntur aut 38 narrantur aut dicto notantur. Rarum est, ut oculis 456

QUINTILIAN

subiicere contingat, ut fecit C. Iulius; qui, cum Helvio Manciae saepius obstrepenti sibi diceret, Etiā ostendam, qualis sis, isque plane instaret interrogatione, qualem se ostensurus esset, digito demonstravit imaginem Galli in scuto Cimbrico pictam, cui Mancia tum simillimus est visus. Tabernae autem erant circa forum, ac scutum illud signi gratia positum.

- 39 Narrare, quae salsa sint, inprimis est subtile et oratorium, ut Cicero pro Cluentio narrat de Caepasio atque Fabricio aut M. Caelius de illa D. Laelii collegaeque eius in provinciam festinantium contentione. Sed in his omnibus cum elegans et venusta exigitur tota expositio, tum id festivissimum est quod adiicit orator. Nam et a Cicerone sic est
- 40 Fabricii fuga illa condita: Itaque cum callidissime se putaret dicere, et cum illa verba gravissima ex intimo artificio deprompsisset, Respicite, iudices, hominum fortunas, respicite C. Fabricii senectutem, cum hoc, Respicite, ornandae orationis causa saepe dixisset, respexit ipse; at Fabricius a subselliis demisso capite discesserat, et cetera, quae adiecit (nam est notus locus), cum in re hoc

¹ Cic. de Or. II. lxxvi. 286.

² pro Cluent. xxi. 58.

QUINTILIAN

- 41 solum esset, Fabricium a iudicio recessisse. Et Caelius cum omnia venustissime finxit, tum illud ultimum, Hic subsecutus quomodo transierit, utrum rate an piscatorio navigio, nemo sciebat, Siculi quidem, ut sunt lascivi et dicaces, aiebant in delphino sedisse et sic tan-
- 42 quam Ariona transvectum. In narrando autem Cicero consistere facetias putat, dicacitatem in iaciendo. Mire fuit in hoc genere venustus Afer Domitius, cuius orationibus complures huiusmodi narrationes insertae reperiuntur, sed dictorum quoque ab eodem
- 43 urbane sunt editi libri. Illud quoque genus est positum non in hac veluti iaculatione dictorum et inclusa breviter urbanitate sed in quodam longiore actu, quod de L. Crasso contra Brutum Cicero in secundo de Oratore libro, et aliis quibusdam locis
- 44 narrat. Nam, cum Brutus in accusatione Cn. Planci ex duobus lectoribus ostendisset, contraria L. Crassum patronum eius in oratione, quam de Colonia Narbonensi habuerat, suasisse iis, quae de lege Servilia dixerat, tris excitavit et ipse lectores, hisque patris eius dialogos dedit legendos; quorum cum in Priver-nati unus, alter in Albano, tertius in Tiburti sermonem habitum complecteretur, requirebat, ubi essent eae possessiones. Omnes autem illas Brutus vendiderat; et tum paterna emancipare praedia turpius habeba-

¹ i.e. D. Laelius or his colleague: see § 39.

² Orat. xxvi. 87. ³ lv. 223.

⁴ Probably members of his household, employed on this occasion to read out passages from Crassus' previous speeches.

tur. Similis in apologis quoque et quibusdam interim etiam historiis exponendi gratia consequi solet.

- 45 Sed acutior est illa atque velocior in urbanitate brevis. Cuius quidem duplex forma est dicendi ac respondendi, sed ratio communis in partem; nihil enim quod in lacescendo dici potest, non etiam in 46 repercutiendo. At quaedam propria sunt respondentium; illa etiam¹ atque etiam cogitata adferri solent, haec plerumque in altercatione aut in rogandis testibus reperiuntur.² Cum sint autem loci plures, ex quibus dicta ridicula ducantur, repetendum est mihi non omnes eos oratoribus convenire; in primis
47 ex amphibolia neque illa obscena,³ quae Atellani e more captant, nec qualia vulgo iactantur a vilissimo quoque, conversa in maledictum fere ambiguitate; ne illa quidem, quae Ciceroni aliquando sed non in agendo exciderunt, ut dixit, cum is candidatus, qui coqui filius habebatur, coram eo suffragium ab alio
48 peteret: Ego quoque tibi favebo. Non quia excludenda sint omnino verba duos sensus significantia, sed quia raro belle respondeant, nisi cum prorsus rebus ipsis

¹ etiam atque etiam, Spalding: etiam itaque or etiam ira MSS.: cogitata, Becher: concitati, MSS.

² reperiuntur, Spalding: requiruntur, A: requirantur, G.

³ obscena, Teuffel: obscura, MSS.

¹ The pun is untranslatable, turning as it does on the similarity of sound between coque and quoque, so that the adiuvantur. Quare [non hoc modo]¹ paene et ipsum scurrile Ciceronis est in eundem, de quo supra dixi, Isauricum: Miror, quid sit, quod pater tuus, homo con-

49 stantissimus, te nobis varium reliquit. Sed illud ex eodem genere praeclarum; cum obiiceret Miloni accusator in argumentum factarum Clodio insidia-rum, quod Bovillas ante horam monam devertisset, ut exspectaret, dum Clodius a villa sua exiret, et identidem interrogaret, quo tempore Clodius occisus
esset, respondit, Sero; quod vel solum sufficit, ut 50 hoc genus non totum repudiatur. Nec plura modo significari solent, sed etiam diversa, ut Nero de servo
pessimo dixit nulli plus apud se fidei haberi, nihil 51 ei neque occlusum neque signatum esse. Pervenit res usque ad aenigma, quale est Ciceronis in Pletorium Fonteii accusatorem, cuius matrem, dixit, dum vixisset,
X ludum, postquam mortua esset, magistros habuisse. Dicebantur autem, dum vixit, infames feminae convenire
ad eam solitae; post mortem bona eius venierant.
Quanquam hic ludus per translationem dictus est,
52 magistri per ambiguitatem. In metalepsin quoque

¹ non hoc modo, bracketed by Halm.

¹ Here again the pun is virtually untranslatable. varium is used in the double sense of unstable or mottled, with reference to the story that he had been scourged by his father. See above § 25.

² sero may mean at a late hour or too late.

³ Cic. de Or. II. lxi. 248. Probably C. Claudius Nero, victor of the Metaurus.

QUINTILIAN

cadit eadem ratio dictorum, ut Fabius Maximus, incusans Augusti congiariorum, quae amicis dabantur, exiguitatem, heminaria esse dixit; nam congiarium commune liberalitatis atque mensurae, a mensura 53 ducta imminutio rerum. Haec tam frigida quam est nominum fictio adiectis, detractis, mutatis litteris, ut Acisculum, quia esset pactus, Pacisculum, et Placidum nomine, quod is acerbus natura esset, Acidum, et 54 Tullium, cum fur esset, Tollium dictos invenio. Sed haec eadem genera commodius in rebus quam in nominibus respondent. Afer enim venuste Manlium Suram, multum in agendo discursantem, salientem, manus iactantem, togam deiicientem et reponentem, non agere, dixit, sed satagere. Est enim dictum per se urbanum satagere etiamsi nulla subsit alterius 55 verbi similitudo. Fiunt et adiecta et detracta aspiratione et divisis coniunctisque verbis similiter saepius frigida, aliquando tamen recipienda. Eademque condicio est in iis, quae a nominibus trahuntur. Multa ex hoc Cicero in Verrem, sed ut ab aliis dicta, ¹ See VIII. vi. 37. "Substitution" is the nearest translation.

² congiarium is derived from congius a measure equal to about 6 pints. It was employed to denote the largesse of wine or oil distributed to the people. Fabius coined the word heminarium from hemina, the twelfth part of the congius. Fabius was consul in 10 B.C. and a friend of Ovid.

³ From tollere to take away.

QUINTILIAN

- modo futurum, ut omnia verreret, cum diceretur Verres, modo Herculi, quem expilaverat, molestiorem apud Erymanthio fuisse, modo malum sacerdotem, qui tam nequam verrem reliquisset, quia Sacerdoti Verres successerat. Praebet tamen aliquando occasionem quaedam felicitas hoc quoque bene utendi: ut pro Caecina Cicero in testem Sex. Clodium Phormionem, Nec minus niger, inquit, nec minus confidens quam est ille Terentianus Phormio.
- 57 Acriora igitur sunt et elegantiora, quae trahuntur ex vi rerum. In his maxime valet similitudo, si tamen ad aliquid inferius leviusque referatur; quae iam veteres illi iocabantur, qui Lentulum Spintherem et Scipionem Serapionem esse dixerunt. Sed ea non ab hominibus modo petitur verum etiam ab animalibus, ut nobis pueris Iunius Bassus, homo inprimis 58 dicax, asinus albus vocabatur; et Sarmentus Messium Cicirrum equo fero comparavit. Ducitur et ab inanimis¹ sicut P. Blaesus Iulium, hominem nigrum et macrum et pandum, fibulam ferream dixit. Quod 59 nunc risus petendi genus frequentissimum est: Adhi-

¹ Messium . . . inanimis, an addition suggested by Radermacher.

¹ verres is also the second pers. sing. of the future of verro.

² verres means a boar and here suggests a pig that should have been killed as a victim. For these jests see Verr. II. xxi. 62, IV. xliii. 95, I. xlv. 121 respectively. Compare also IV. xxiv. 53 and xxv. 57.

³ x. 27. The reference must be to the make-up of Phormio on the stage: there is nothing in the play to suggest the epithet "black."

QUINTILIAN

betur autem similitudo interim palam, interim inseri solet parabola; cuius est generis illud Augusti, qui militi libellum timide porrigenti, Noli, inquit, tanquam
 60 assem elephanto des. Sunt quaedam vi¹ similia; unde Vatinius dixit hoc dictum, cum reus, agente in eum Calvo, frontem candido sudario tergeret, idque ipsum accusator in invidiam vocaret, Quamvis reus sum, inquit, 61 *et panem item*² candidum edo. Adhuc est subtilior illa ex simili translatio, cum, quod in alia re fieri solet, in aliam mutuamur. Ea dicatur sane fictio: ut Chrysippus, cum in triumpho Caesaris eborea oppida essent translata, et post dies paucos Fabii Maximi lignea, thecas esse oppidorum Caesaris dixit. Et Peto de mirmillone, qui retiarium consequebatur nec feriebat, 62 Vivum, inquit, capere vult. Iungitur amphiboliae similitudo, ut a Galba, qui pilam negligenter petenti, Sic, inquit, petis, tanquam Caesaris candidatus.

¹ vi is the reading of AG, but is unsatisfactory as introducing nothing new. veri (some later MSS.), vitii (Halm), vix (Radermacher), do nothing to help out the meaning.

² panem item, Haupt: parentem, MSS.

¹ The accused habitually wore mourning. Calvus suggested that Vatinius should not therefore have a white handkerchief. Vatinius retorts, You might as well say that I ought to have dropped eating white bread.

² Legatus of Caesar in Spain. The wooden models were so worthless compared with those of ivory that Chrysippus said they must be no more than the boxes in which Caesar kept the latter.

³ Probably Chrysippus Vettius, a freedman and architect.

⁴ Presumably the poet Peto Albinovanus.

QUINTILIAN

Nam illud petis ambiguum est, securitas similis.

- 63 Quod hactenus ostendisse satis est. Ceterum frequentissima aliorum generum cum aliis mixtura est, eaque optima, quae ex pluribus constat. Eadem dissimilium ratio est. Hinc eques Romanus, ad quem in spectaculis bibentem cum misisset Augustus, qui ei diceret, Ego si prandere volo, domum eo: Tu
 64 enim, inquit, non times, ne locum perdas. Ex contrario non una species. Neque enim eodem modo dixit Augustus praefecto, quem cum ignominia mittebat, subinde interponenti precibus, Quid respondebo patri meo? Dic, me tibi displicuisse; quo Galba penulam roganti: Non possum commodare, domi maneo, cum cenaculum eius perplueret. Tertium adhuc illud: (nisi quod,¹ ut ne auctorem ponam, verecundia ipsius facit) Libidinosior es quam ullus spado; quo sine dubio et opinio decipitur sed ex contrario. Et hoc ex eodem loco est sed nulli priorum simile, quod dixit M. Vestinus, cum ei nuntiatum esset... necatum esse,² 65 Aliquando desinet putere. Onerabo librum exemplis similemque iis, qui risus gratia componuntur, efficiam, si persequi voluero singula veterum.

¹ nisi quod, Becher: si quod, AG.

² necatum esse, supplied by Spalding.

Ex omnibus argumentorum locis eadem occasio
est. Nam et finitione usus est Augustus de pantomimis duobus, qui alternis gestibus contendebant, cum eorum alterum saltatorem dixit alterum interpella- 86 torem; et partitione Galba, cum paenulam roganti respondit, Non pluit, non opus est tibi; si pluit, ipse
utar. Proinde genere, specie, propriis, differentibus, iugatis, adiunctis, consequentibus, antecedentibus,
repugnantibus, causis, effectis, comparatione parium,
maiorum, minorum similis materia praebetur; sicut 87 in tropos quoque omnes cadit. An non plurima per hyperbolen¹ dicuntur? quale refert Cicero de homine
praelongo, caput eum ad fornicem Fabium offendisse;
et quod P. Oppius dixit de genere Lentulorum, cum assidue minores parentibus liberi essent, nascendo 88 interiturum. Quid ironia? nonne etiam quae severissime fit, ioci prope genus est? Qua urbane usus est Afer, cum Didio Gallo, qui provinciam ambitiosis-sime petierat, deinde, impetrata ea, tanquam coactus querebatur, Age, inquit, aliquid et rei publicae causa.
Metaphora² quoque Cicero lusit, cum, Vatinii morte nuntiata, cuius parum certus dicebatur auctor, Inte-

¹ per hyperbolen, added by Regius.

² metaphora, Halm: et abora, et labora, etc., MSS.

¹ See v. x. 85.

² See v. x. 55 sqq.

³ cp. de Orat. II. lxvi. 267, where the jest is attributed to Crassus.

QUINTILIAN

- 69 rim, inquit, usura fruar. Idem per allegoriam M. Caelium, melius obiiicientem crimina quam defendentem, bonam dextram, malam sinistram habere dicebat. Emphasi A. Villius dixit, ferrum in Tuccium incidisse. Figuras quoque mentis, quae σχήματα διαβολίας dicuntur, res eadem recipit omnes, in quas nonnulli diviserunt species dictorum. Nam et interrogamus et dubitamus et adfirmamus et minamur et optamus, quaedam ut miserantes, quaedam ut irascentes dicimus. Ridiculum est autem omne,
- 71 quod aperte fingitur. Stulta reprehendere facillimum est, nam per se sunt ridicula; sed rem urbanam facit aliqua ex nobis adiectio. Stulte interrogaverat exeuntem de theatro Campatium Titius Maximus, an spectasset? fecit Campatius dubitationem eius stultiorem dicendo, Non, sed in orchestra pila lusi.
- 72 Refutatio cum sit in negando, redarguendo, defendendo, elevando, ridicule negavit Manius Curius; nam, cum eius accusator in sipario omnibus locis aut nudum eum in nervo aut ab amicis redemptum ex
- 73 alea pinxisset: Ergo ego, inquit, nunquam vici? Re-

¹ The report may be false, but I will enjoy the hope it arouses in me. The capital on which I receive a dividend may be non-existent, but I will enjoy the interest.

² The right being the sword arm, the left carrying the shield.

³ Tuccius was clearly a coward who committed suicide. Villius suggested that he would never have had the courage

QUINTILIAN

darguimus interim aperte, ut Cicero Vibium Curium multum de annis aetatis suae mentientem, Tum ergo, cum una declamabamus, non eras natus; interim et simulata assensione, ut idem Fabia Dolabellae dicente triginta se annos habere, Verum est, inquit; nam
 74 hoc illam iam viginti annis audio. Belle interim subiicitur pro eo, quod neges, aliud mordacius: ut Iunius Bassus, querente Domitia Passieni, quod incusans eius sordes calceos eam veteres diceret vendere solere, Non mehercules, inquit, hoc unquam dixi; sed dixi emere te solere. Defensionem imitatus est eques Romanus, qui obiicienti Augusto, quod patrimonium
 75 comedisset, Meum, inquit, putavi. Elevandi ratio est duplex, ut aut nimiam quis¹ iactantiam minuat: quemadmodum C. Caesar Pomponio ostendenti vulnus ore exceptum in seditione Sulpicianae, quod is se passum pro Caesare pugnantes gloriabatur, Nunquam fugiens respexeris, inquit; aut crimen obiectum, ut Cicero obiurgantibus, quod sexagenarius Publiliam 76 virginem duxisset, Cras mulier erit, inquit. Hoc genus dicti consequens vocant quidam, atque illi

¹ nimiam quis, Deffner: veniam quis aut, MSS.

¹ See VI. i. 50.

² A cousin of the father of C. Julius Caesar.

QUINTILIAN

simile, quod Cicero Curionem, semper ab excusatione aetatis incipientem, facilius cotidie prooemium habere dixit, quia ista natura sequi et cohaerere 77 videantur. Sed elevandi genus est etiam causarum relatio, qua Cicero est usus in Vatinius. Qui pedibus aeger, cum vellet videri commodioris valetudinis factus et diceret, se iam bina milia passuum ambulare, Dies enim, inquit, longiores sunt. Et Augustus nuntiantibus Tarraconensibus palmam in ara eius 78 enatam, Apparet, inquit, quam saepe accendatis. Transtulit crimen Cassius Severus. Nam cum obiurgaretur a praetore, quod advocati eius L. Varo Epicureo, Caesaris amico, convicium fecissent, Nescio, inquit, qui conviciati sint, et puto Stoicos fuisse.

Repercutiendi multa sunt genera, venustissimum, quod etiam similitudine aliqua verbi adjuvatur: ut Trachalus dicenti Suelio, "Si hoc ita est, is in exilium,"
79 "Si non est ita, redis," inquit. Elusit Cassius Severus obiiciente quodam, quod ei domo sua Proculus interdixisset, respondendo, Numquid ergo illuc accedo? Sic eluditur et ridiculum ridiculo: ut dives Augustus, cum ei Galli torquem aureum centum pondo dedissent, et Dolabella per iocum, temptans tamen

¹ The point is obscure; we have no key to the circumstances of the jest.

QUINTILIAN

- ioci sui eventum, dixisset, "Imperator, torque me dona,"
- 80 "Malo, inquit, te civica donare" : mendacium quoque mendacio, ut Galba, dicente quodam, victoriato se uno in Sicilia quinque pedes longam murenā emissee : Nihil, inquit, mirum ; nam ibi tam longae nascuntur, ut
- 81 uis piscatores pro restibus cingantur. Contraria est neganti confessionis simulatio, sed ipsa quoque multum habet urbanitatis. Sic Afer, cum ageret contra libertum Claudii Caesaris, et ex diverso quidam conditionis eiusdem, cuius erat litigator, exclamasset, "Praeterea tu semper in liberos Caesaris dicis," "Nec mehercule, inquit, quicquam proficio." Cui vicinū est non negare quod obicitur, cum et id palam falsum est et inde materia bene respondendi datur : ut Catulus dicenti Philippo, "Quid latras ?" "Furem
- 82 video," inquit. In se dicere non fere est nisi scurrarum et in oratore utique minime probabile, quod fieri totidem modis quot in alios potest. Ideoque hoc,
- 83 quamvis frequens sit, transeo. Illud vero, etiamsi ridiculum est, indignum tamen est homine liberali,¹ quod aut turpiter aut potenter dicitur ; quod fecisse

¹ liberali, early edd. : tolerabili, MSS.

¹ The civic crown of oak leaves was given as a reward for saving the life of a fellow-citizen in war. The torquis was often given as a reward for valour, and Augustus pretends to believe that Dolabella had asked for a military decoration. The point lies in the contrast between the intrinsic value and quendam scio, qui humiliori libere adversus se loquenti, Colaphum, inquit, tibi ducam et formulam scribam,¹ quod caput durum habeas. Hic enim dubium est, utrum ridere audientes an indignari debuerint.

QUINTILIAN

- 84 Superest genus decipiendi opinionem aut dicta aliter intelligendi, quae sunt in omni hac materia vel venustissima. Inopinatum et a lacescente poni solet, quale est, quod refert Cicero, Quid huic abest nisi res et virtus? aut illud Afri, Homo in agendis causis optime vestitus; et in occurrendo, ut Cicero, audita falsa Vatinii morte, cum obvium libertum eius interrogasset, "Rectene omnia?" dicenti, "Recte,"
- 85 "Mortuus est?" inquit. Plurimus autem circa simulationem et dissimulationem² risus est, quae sunt vicina et prope eadem; sed simulatio est certam opinionem animi sui imitantis, dissimulatio aliena se parum intelligere fingentis. Simulavit Afer, cum in causa subinde dicentibus Celsinam de re cognovisse, quae erat potens femina: Quis est, inquit, iste?
- 86 Celsinam enim videri sibi virum finxit. Dissimulavit Cicero, cum Sex. Annalis testis reum laesisset, et instaret identidem accusator ei, Dic, M. Tulli,

¹ scribam, Badius: scribes, A: scribe, G.

² et dissimulationem, added by Regius.

¹ See IX. ii. 22.

² de Or. II. lxx. 281.

³ cp. § 68.

QUINTILIAN

*numquid*¹ potes de Sex. Annali? versus enim dicere coepit de libro Ennii annali sexto :

Quis potis ingentis causas evolvere belli ?

- 87 Cui sine dubio frequentissimam dat occasionem ambiguitas : ut Cascellio, qui consultatori dicenti, "Navem dividere volo," "Perdes," inquit. Sed averti intellectus et aliter solet, cum ab asperioribus ad leniora deflectitur : ut qui interrogatus, quid sentiret de eo, qui in adulterio deprehensus esset, Tardum
88 fuisse respondit. Ei confine est, quod dicitur per suspicionem : quale illud apud Ciceronem querenti, quod uxor sua ex fico sese suspendisset, Rogo, des mihi surculum ex illa arbore, ut inseram; intelligitur
89 enim quod non dicitur. Et hercule omnis salse dicendi ratio in eo est, ut aliter quam est rectum verumque dicatur : quod fit totum fingendis aut nostris aut alienis persuasionibus aut dicendo quod
90 fieri non potest. Alienam finxit Iuba, qui querenti, quod ab equo suo esset aspersus, Quid ? Tu, inquit, me Hippocentaurum putas ? suam C. Cassius, qui militi

¹ Tulli numquid, cod. Parisinus 7723 : Tullius inquit, AG.

¹ Enn. 174 (with oras for causas). The question (numquid, etc.) is treated by Cicero as meaning "Can you quote anything from the sixth book of the Annals?" ingentis is acc. plural.

² A famous lawyer mentioned by Horace, A.P. 371. Cascellius pretends to take dividere literally (i.e. cut in two); his client had meant "to sell half his ship," i.e. take a partner in the venture.

QUINTILIAN

- sine gladio decurrenti, Heus, commilito, pugno bene uteris, inquit. Et Galba de piscibus, qui cum pridie ex parte adesi et versati postera die appositi essent, Festinemus, alii subcenant, inquit. Tertium illud Cicero, ut dixi, adversus Curium; fieri enim certe non pote-
- 91 rat ut, cum declamaret, natus non esset. Est et illa ex ironia fictio, qua usus est C. Caesar. Nam cum testis diceret a reo femina sua ferro petita, et esset facilis reprehensio, cur illam potissimum partem corporis vulnerare voluisset: Quid enim faceret, inquit,
- 92 cum tu galeam et loricam haberes? Vel optima est simulatio contra simulantem, qualis illa Domitii Afri fuit: vetus habebat testamentum, et unus ex amicis recentioribus, sperans aliquid ex mutatione tabularum, falsam fabulam intulerat, consulens eum, an primipilari seni iam testato rursus¹ suaderet ordinare suprema iudicia. Noli, inquit, facere; offendis illum.
- 93 Iucundissima sunt autem ex his omnibus lenia et, ut sic dixerim, boni stomachi: ut Afer idem ingrato litigatori conspectum eius in foro vitanti per nomenclatorem missum ad eum, Amas me, inquit, quod te non vidi? Et dispensatori, qui, cum reliqua non

¹ primipilari . . . rursus, Spalding: primipilaris enim intestator, AG.

¹ § 73.

² Lit. the slave employed to name persons to his master.

QUINTILIAN

- responderent, dicebat subinde, "Non comedi; pane et aqua vivo,"¹ "Passer, redde quod debes." Quae ὑπὸ τὸ 94 ἦθος vocant. Est gratus iocus, qui minus exprobrat quam potest, ut idem dicenti candidato, Semper domum tuam colui, cum posset palam negare, Credo, inquit, et verum est. Interim de se dicere ridiculum et quod in alium si absentem diceretur urbanum non erat, 95 quoniam ipsi palam exprobratur, movet risum: quale Augusti est, cum ab eo miles nescio quid improbe peteret et veniret contra Marcianus, quem suspicabatur et ipsum aliquid iniuste rogaturum: Non magis, inquit, faciam, commilito, quod petis, quam quod Marcianus a me petiturus est.
- 96 Adiuvant urbanitatem et versus commode positi, seu toti ut sunt (quod adeo facile est, ut Ovidius ex tetrastichon Macri carmine librum in malos poetas composuerit), quod fit gratius, si qua etiam ambiguitate conditur: ut Cicero in Lartium, hominem callidum et versutum, cum is in quadam causa suspectus esset, Nisi si qua Ulixes intervasit Lartius; seu verbis ex parte mutatis, ut in eum qui, cum antea

¹ responderet MSS. corr. Salmasius. pane et aqua, A: panem et aquam, remaining MSS. vivo, Haupt: bibo, MSS.

¹ The meaning is dubious and the phrase cannot be paralleled and is probably corrupt.

² Aemilius Macer, a contemporary of Virgil and Horace. The work presumably consisted of epigrams, four lines long.

³ The author, presumably a tragic poet, is unknown. Lartius = Laertius, son of Laertes.

QUINTILIAN

- stultissimus esset habitus, post acceptam hereditatem primus sententiam rogabatur, Hereditas est, quam vocant sapientiam, pro illo, facilitas est; seu ficti notis
- 98 versibus similes, quae παρωδία dicitur. Et proverbia opportune aptata: ut homini nequam lapso et, ut allevaretur, roganti, Tollat te qui non novit. Ex historia etiam ducere urbanitatem, eruditum est: ut Cicero fecit, cum ei testem in iudicio Verris roganti dixisset Hortensius, "Non intelligo haec aenigmata." "Atqui debes, inquit, cum Sphingem domi habeas"; acceperat autem ille a Verre Sphingem aeneam magnae pecuniae.
- 99 Subabsurda illa constant stulti simulatione; quae,¹ nisi fingantur, stulta sunt: ut, qui mirantibus, quod humile candelabrum emisset, Pransorium erit, inquit. Sed illa similia absurdis sunt acria, quae tanquam sine ratione dicta feruntur: ut servus Dolabellae, cum interrogaretur an dominus eius auctionem proposuisset, Domum, inquit, vendidit.

¹ stulti simulatione; quae, Spalding: stultissimi imitatione et quae, MSS.

¹ Probably from a lost comedy.

² Hor. Ep. I. xvii. 62, where the passers by reply Quaere peregrinum to an imposter who, having fallen down and broken his leg, implores them to pick him up, crying Credite, non ludo: crudeles, tollite claudum.

QUINTILIAN

100 Deprehensi interim pudorem suum ridiculo aliquo explicant: ut, qui testem dicentem se a reo vulneratum interrogaverat an cicatricem haberet, cum ille ingentem in femine ostendisset, Latus, inquit, oportuit. Contumeliis quoque uti belle datur: ut Hispo obiicienti atrociora¹ crimina accusatori, Me ex te metiris,² inquit. Et Fulvius Propinquus legato interroganti an in tabulis, quas proferebat, chirographus esset, Et verus, inquit, domine.

101 Has aut accepi species aut inveni frequentissimas, ex quibus ridicula ducerentur; sed repetam necesse est, infinitas esse tam salse dicendi quam severe, quas praestat persona, locus, tempus, casus denique,

102 qui est maxime varius. Itaque haec, ne omisisse viderer, attigi; illa autem, quae de usu ipso et modo iocandi complexus sum, audeo confirmare³ esse plane necessaria.

His adiicit Domitius Marsus, qui de urbanitate diligentissime scripsit, quaedam non ridicula, sed cuilibet severissimae orationi convenientia eleganter dicta et proprio quodam lepore iucunda; quae sunt

103 quidem urbana sed risum tamen non habent. Neque

¹ contumeliis Badius: umis AG: atrociora, Halm: arbore, MSS.

² me ex te metiris, Burmman: mentis, mentiris, MSS.

³ audeo confirmare, Radermacher: adeo infirmare, infirmarem, infirma sed, MSS.

¹ sc. because then he would have killed you.

² Presumably the legatus had been suspected of forgery.

QUINTILIAN

enim ei de risu sed de urbanitate est opus institutum, quam propriam esse nostrae civitatis et sero sic intelligi coeptam, postquam Urbis appellatione, etiamsi nomen proprium non adiiceretur, Romam
 104 tamen accipi sit receptum. Eamque sic finit: Urbanitas est virtus quaedam in breve dictum coacta et apta ad delectandos movendosque homines in omnem adfectum animi, maxime idonea ad resistendum vel lacessendum, prout quaeque res aut persona desiderat. Cui si brevitatis exceptionem detraxeris, omnes orationis virtutes complexa sit. Nam si constat rebus et personis, quod in utrisque oporteat dicere perfectae eloquentiae est. Cur autem brevem esse
 105 eam voluerit, nescio, cum idem atque¹ in eodem libro dicat fuisse in multis narrandi urbanitatem. Paulo post ita finit, Catonis (ut ait) opinionem secutus, Urbanus homo erit, cuius multa bene dicta responsaque erunt, et qui in sermonibus, circulis, conviviiis, item in contionibus, omni denique loco ridicule commodeque dicet. Risus erunt, quicunque haec faciet 106 orator. Quas si recipimus finitiones, quidquid bene dicetur, et urbane dicti nomen accipiet. Ceterum illi, qui hoc proposuerat, consentanea fuit illa divisio, ut dictorum urbanorum alia seria, alia iocosa, alia

¹ cum idem atque, Halm: cumidem ad quem, A: cuidem ad quem, G; quidem at quam, codd. litt.

QUINTILIAN

media faceret. Nam est eadem omnium bene dictorum. Verum mihi etiam iocosa quaedam videntur 107 posse in non satis urbana referri. Nam meo quidem iudicio illa est urbanitas, in qua nihil absonum, nihil agreste, nihil inconditum, nihil peregrinum neque sensu neque verbis neque ore gestuve possit deprehendi; ut non tam sit in singulis dictis quam in toto
colore dicendi, qualis apud Graecos ἀττικισμὸς ille 108 reddens Athenarum proprium saporem. Ne tamen iudicium Marsi, hominis eruditissimi, subtraham, seria partitur in tria genera, honorificum, contumeliosum, medium. Et honorifici ponit exemplum Ciceronis pro Ligario apud Caesarem, Qui nihil soles
109 oblivisci nisi iniurias; et contumeliosi, quod Attico scripsit de Pompeio et Caesare, Habeo, quem fugiam;
quem sequar, non habeo; et medii, quod ἀποφθεγματικὸν vocat et est ita, cum dixerit, Nec gravem mortem accidere viro forti posse nec immaturam consulari neque miseram sapienti. Quae omnia sunt optime dicta; sed cur proprie nomen urbanitatis accipiant, 110 non video. Quod si non totius, ut mihi videtur, orationis color meretur, sed etiam singulis dictis
tribuendum est, illa potius urbana dixerim, quae sunt generis eiusdem, quo ridicula dicuntur et tamen

¹ xii. 35.

² Ad. Att. viii. vii. 2.

³ iv. ii. 3.

QUINTILIAN

ridicula non sunt, ut de Pollione Asinio seriis iocisque
pariter accommodato dictum est esse eum omnium 111 horarum; et de actore facile dicente ex tempore, ingenium eum in numerato habere; etiam Pompeii,
quod refert Marsus, in Ciceronem diffidentem partibus, Transi ad Caesarem, me timebis. Erat enim, si de re minore aut alio animo aut denique non ab
ipso dictum fuisset, quod posset inter ridicula nume-112 rari. Etiam illud, quod Cicero Caerelliae scripsit reddens rationem, cur illa C. Caesaris tempora tam patienter toleraret, Haec aut animo Catonis ferenda sunt aut Ciceronis stomacho; stomachus enim ille habet aliquid ioco simile. Haec, quae movebant, dissimulanda mihi non fuerunt; in quibus ut erraverim, legentes tamen non decepi, indicata et diversa
opinionem, quam sequi magis probantibus liberum est.

IV. Altercationis praecepta poterant videri tunc inchoanda, cum omnia, quae ad continuam orationem pertinent, peregissem, nam est usus eius ordine ultimus; sed, cum sit posita in sola inventionem neque habere dispositionem possit nec elocutionis ornamenta magnopere desideret aut circa memoriam et pronun-tiationem laboret, prius quam secundam quinque
partium, hanc quae tota ex prima pendet tractaturus

¹ Now lost. Caerellia was a literary lady.

² i.e. he must "stomach" it.

³ The altercatio, which followed the set speeches, took the form of a number of brief arguments pro and con.

⁴ See v. Pr. 5.

QUINTILIAN

non alieno loco videor; quam scriptores alii fortasse
ideo reliquerunt, quia satis ceteris praeceptis in hanc
2 quoque videbatur esse prospectum. Constat enim ex intentione ac depulsione, de quibus satis traditum est; quia, quidquid in actione perpetua circa probationes utile est, idem in hac brevi atque concisa prosit necesse est. Neque alia dicuntur in altercatione, sed aliter, aut interrogando aut respondendo.
Cuius rei fere omnis observatio in illo testium loco 3 excussa nobis est. Tamen quia latius hoc opus aggressi sumus neque perfectus orator sine hac virtute dici potest, paululum impendamus huic quoque peculiaris operae, quae quidem in quibusdam causis 4 ad victoriam vel plurimum valet. Nam ut in qualitate generali, in qua rectene factum quid an contra sit quaeritur, perpetua dominatur oratio, et quaestio-nem finitionis actiones plerumque satis explicant et omnia paene, in quibus de facto constat aut coniectura artificiali ratione colligitur, ita in iis causis, quae sunt frequentissimae, quae vel solis extra artem probationibus vel mixtis continentur, asperrima in hac
parte dimicatio est, nec alibi dixeris magis mucrone 5 pugnari. Nam et firmissima quaeque memoriae iudicis inculcanda sunt et praestandum quidquid in

¹ See v. vii.

³ See v. i.

² See III. vi.

⁴ See v. i.

QUINTILIAN

- actione promissimus et refellenda mendacia. Nusquam est denique qui cognoscit intentior. Nec immerito quidam quanquam in dicendo mediocres hac tamen altercandi praestantia meruerunt nomen patronorum. At quidam litigatoribus suis illum modo ambitiosum declamandi sudorem praestitisse contenti cum turba laudantium destituunt subsellia pugnamque illam decretoriam imperitis ac saepe pullatae turbae relinquunt. Itaque videas alios plerumque iudiciis privatis ad actiones advocari alios ad probationem. Quae si dividenda sunt officia, hoc certe magis necessarium est, pudendumque dictu, si plus litigantibus prosunt minores. In publicis certe iudiciis vox illa praeconis praeter patronos ipsum, qui egerit, citat.
- Opus est igitur inprimis ingenio veloci ac mobili, animo praesenti et acri. Non enim cogitandum, sed dicendum statim est et prope sub conatu adversarii manus exigenda. Quare cum in omni parte huiusce officii plurimum facit, totas non diligenter modo sed etiam familiariter nosse causas, tum in altercatione maxime necessarium est, omnium personarum, instrumentorum, temporum, locorum habere notitiam;

¹ The allusion is obscure. But Quintilian's point seems to be merely that the pleader is officially regarded as being of at least equal importance with the other advocates.

QUINTILIAN

alioqui et tacendum erit saepe et aliis subiicientibus (plerumque autem studio loquendi fatue modo) accedendum; quo nonnunquam accidit, ut nostra creduli-9 tate aliena stultitia erubescamus. Neque tantum cum his ipsis monitoribus clam res erit¹; quidam faciunt aperte ut quoque rixentur.² Videas enim plerosque
 ira percitos exclamantes, ut iudex audiat contrarium
 id esse, quod admoneatur, sciatque ille, qui pronun-10 tiaturus est in causa, malum quod tacetur. Quare bonus altercator vitio iracundiae careat; nullus enim rationi magis obstat adfectus et fert extra causam plerumque et deformia convicia facere ac mereri cogit et in ipsos nonnunquam iudices incitat. Melior moderatio ac nonnunquam etiam patientia. Neque enim refutanda tantum quae ex contrario dicuntur, sed contemnenda, elevanda, ridenda sunt; nec usquam plus loci recipit urbanitas. Hoc, dum ordo est et pudor; contra turbantes audendum et impu-11 dentiae fortiter resistendum. Sunt enim quidam praeduri in hoc oris, ut obstrepant ingenti clamore

¹ tantum . . . clam res erit, Halm: tam cum . . . clarescit, MSS.

² ut quoque rixentur, Madvig: quod (or quae) rixemur, MSS.

QUINTILIAN

- et medios sermones intercipient et omnia tumultu confundant, quos ut non imitari sic acriter propulsare oportebit, et ipsorum improbitatem retundendo, et iudices vel praesidentes magistratus appellando frequentius, ut loquendi vices serventur. Non est res animi iacentis et mollis supra modum frontis, fallitque plerumque, quod probitas vocatur, quae est im-
- 12 becillitas. Valet autem in altercatione plurimum acumen, quod sine dubio ex arte non venit (natura
- 13 enim non docetur), arte tamen adiuvatur. In qua praecipuum est, semper id in oculis habere, de quo quaeritur et quod volumus efficere; quod propositum tenentes nec in rixam ibimus nec causae debita tempora conviciando conteremus gaudebimusque, si hoc adversarius facit.
- 14 Omni tempore fere parata sunt meditatis diligenter, quae aut ex adverso dici aut responderi a nobis possunt. Nonnunquam tamen solet hoc quoque esse artis genus, ut quaedam in actione dissimulata subito in altercando proferantur; est inopinatis eruptionibus aut incursioni ex insidiis factae simillimum. Id autem tum faciendum, cum est aliquid, cui responderi non statim possit, potuerit autem, si tempus ad disponendum fuisset. Nam quod fideliter firmum

QUINTILIAN

- est a primis statim actionibus arripere optimum est, 15 quo saepius diutiusque dicatur. Illud vix saltem praecipiendum videtur, ne turbidus et clamosus tantum sit altercator, et quales faceti sunt, qui litteras nesciunt. Nam improbitas, licet adversario molesta sit, iudici invisa est. Nocet etiam diu pugnare in 16 iis quae obtinere non possis. Nam, ubi vinci necesse est, expedit cedere; quia, sive plura sunt de quibus quaeritur, facilius erit in ceteris fides, sive unum, mitior solet poena irrogari verecundiae. Nam culpam praesertim deprehensam pertinaciter tueri culpa altera est.
- 17 Dum stat acies, multi res consilii atque artis est, ut errantem adversarium trahas et ire quam longissime cogas, ut vana interim spe exultet. Ideo quaedam bene dissimulantur instrumenta. Instant enim et saepe discrimen omne committunt, quod deesse nobis putant, et faciunt probationibus nostris aucto-18 ritatem postulando. Expedit etiam dare aliquid adversario quod pro se putet, quod apprehendens maius aliquid cogatur dimittere; duas interim res proponere quarum utramlibet male sit electurus;

 quod in altercatione fit potentius quam in actione,
 quia in illa nobis ipsi respondemus, in hac adver-19 sarium quasi confessum tenemus. Est inprimis acuti videre, quo iudex dicto moveatur, quid respuat; quod et vultu saepissime et aliquando etiam dicto aliquo factove eius deprehenditur. Et instare proficientibus et ab iis, quae non adiuvent, quam mollissime pedem oportet referre. Faciunt hoc medici quoque, ut remedia proinde perseverent adhibere vel desinant, 20 ut illa recipi vel respui vident. Nonnunquam, si rem evolvere propositam facile non sit, inferenda est alia quaestio, atque in eam iudex, si fieri potest, avocan-
 dus. Quid enim, cum respondere non possis, agendum est, nisi ut aliud invenias, cui adversarius 21 respondere non possit? In plerisque idem est, ut dixi, qui circa testes locus et personis modo distat, quod hic patronorum inter se certamen, illic pugna
 inter testem et patronum.

Exercitatio vero huius rei longe facilior. Nam est utilissimum, frequenter cum aliquo, qui sit studiorum eorundem, sumere materiam vel verae vel etiam fictae controversiae, et diversas partes altercationis modo tueri; quod idem etiam in simplici genere quaestio-22 num fieri potest. Ne illud quidem ignorare advoca-

¹ We propound the dilemma and ourselves point out that whichever answer our opponent gives must tell against him.

² § 2.

³ cp. II. i. 9 and v. x. 53.

QUINTILIAN

tum volo, quo quaeque ordine probatio sit apud iudicem proferenda; cuius rei eadem quae in argumentis ratio est, ut potentissima prima et summa ponantur. Illa enim ad credendum praeparant iudicem, haec ad pronuntiandum.

V. His pro nostra facultate tractatis non dubitasset transire protinus ad dispositionem, quae ordine ipso sequitur, nisi vereretur ne, quoniam fuerunt qui iudicium inventioni subiungerent, praeterisse hunc locum quibusdam videretur, qui mea quidem opinione adeo partibus operis huius omnibus connexus ac mixtus est, ut ne a sententiis quidem aut verbis saltem singulis possit separari, nec magis arte tractatur quam gustus aut odor. Ideoque nos, quid in quaque re sequendum cavendumque sit, docemus ac deinceps docebimus, ut ad ea iudicium dirigatur. Praecipiam igitur, ne, quod effici non potest, aggrediamur, ut contraria vitemus et communia, ne quid in eloquendo corruptum, obscurum sit? Referatur oportet ad sensus, qui non docentur.

3 Nec multum a iudicio credo distare consilium, nisi quod illud ostendentibus se rebus adhibetur, hoc latentibus et aut omnino nondum repertis aut dubiis. Et iudicium frequentissime certum est, consilium

¹ See III. iii. 5 and 6.

QUINTILIAN

vero est ratio quaedam alte petita et plerumque plura perpendens et comparans habensque in se et 4 inventionem et iudicationem. Sed ne de hoc quidem praecepta in universum exspectanda sunt. Nam ex re sumitur cuius locus ante actionem est frequenter;
nam Cicero summo consilio videtur in Verrem vel contrahere tempora dicendi maluisse quam in eum annum, quo erat Q. Hortensius consul futurus, in-5 cidere. Et in ipsis actionibus primum ac potentissimum obtinet locum; nam, quid dicendum, quid tacendum, quid differendum sit, exigere consilii est;
negare sit satis an defendere, ubi prooemio utendum
et quali, narrandumne et quomodo, iure prius pug-nandum an aequo, qui sit ordo utilissimus, tum omnes colores, aspere an leniter an etiam summis-6 loqui expediat. Sed haec quoque, ut quisque passus est locus, monuimus, idemque in reliqua parte faciemus; pauca tamen exempli gratia ponam, quibus manifestius appareat quid sit, quod demonstrari
7 posse praeceptis non arbitror. Laudatur consilium Demosthenis, quod, cum suaderet bellum Athenien-

¹ Phil. i. 2.

QUINTILIAN

sibus parum id prospere expertis, nihil adhuc factum esse ratione monstrat. Poterat enim emendari negligentia; at, si nihil esset erratum, melioris in posterum spei non erat ratio. Idem, cum offensam vereretur, si obiurgaret populi segnitiam in asserenda libertate rei publicae, maiorum laude uti maluit, qui rem publicam fortissime administrassent. Nam et faciles habuit aures, et natura sequebatur, ut meliora probantes peiorum poeniteret. Ciceronis quidem vel una pro Cluentio quamlibet multis exemplis sufficiet oratio. Nam quod in eo consilium maxime mirer? primamne expositionem, qua matri, cuius filium premebat auctoritas, abstulit fidem? an quod iudicii corrupti crimen transferre in adversarium maluit quam negare propter inveteratam, ut ipse dicit, infamiam? an quod in re invidiosa legis auxilio novissime est usus, quo genere defensionis etiam offendisset nondum praemollitas iudicum mentes? an quod se ipsum invito Cluentio facere testatus est? Quid pro Milone? quod non ante narravit, quam praeiudiciis omnibus reum liberaret? quod

¹ Phil. i. 1. ² vi. 17. ³ i. 4. ⁴ lii. 143 sqq.

⁵ lii. 144, 148, 149. ⁶ cp. Quint. III. vi. 93.

QUINTILIAN

insidiarum invidiam in Clodium vertit, quanquam
revera fuerat pugna fortuita? quod factum et laudavit et tamen voluntate Milonis removit? quod illi
preces non dedit et in earum locum ipse successit?
Infinitum est enumerare, ut Cottae detraxerit auctoritatem, ut pro Ligario se opposuerit, Cornelium 11 ipsa confessionis fiducia eripuerit. Illud dicere satis
habeo, nihil esse non modo in orando, sed in omni vita prius consilio, frustra que sine eo tradi ceteras artes, plusque vel sine doctrina prudentiam quam sine prudentia facere doctrinam. Aptare etiam orationem locis, temporibus, personis est eiusdem vir-tutis. Sed hic quia latius fusus est locus mixtusque cum elocutione, tractabitur cum praecipere de apte dicendo coeperimus.

¹ See above i. 25 and 27.

² cp. above v. xiii. 30. The reference is to the pro Oppio.

³ See above v. x. 93.

⁴ See above v. xiii. 18 and 26.

⁵ In xi. i. cp. i. v. 1.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
BOOK IV	1
Preface.—Ch. 1: The prooemium or exordium .— Ch. 2: The narratio or statement of facts.—Ch. 3: Digressions.—Ch. 4: Propositions preparatory to proof.—Ch. 5: Partition.
BOOK V	153
Preface.—Ch. 1: Proofs, artificial and unartificial. —Ch. 2: Previous decisions.—Ch. 3: Public report or opinion.—Ch. 4: Evidence extracted by torture. —Ch. 5: Refutation of documentary evidence.— Ch. 6: Reasons for and against offering to take an oath.—Ch. 7: Documentary evidence; oral evidence; production of witnesses; attitude to be adopted toward witnesses; examination; conflict between documentary and oral evidence; super- natural evidence.—Ch. 8: Artificial proofs.—Ch. 9: Signs, indications, circumstantial evidence, their difference from proofs; appearances; prognostics. —Ch. 10: Arguments.—Ch. 11: Examples and instances.—Ch. 12: Arguments again.—Ch. 13: Refutation and proof.—Ch. 14: The enthymeme, epicheireme, and syllogism.
BOOK VI	371
Preface; the death of Quintilian's son.—Ch. 1: Peroration.—Ch. 2: Necessity of studying the temper of the judges; pathos, ethos, and emotional appeal.—Ch. 3: Laughter, wit, and humour.— Ch. 4: Altercatio or debate.—Ch. 5: Judgment and sagacity.
NOTES	523
INDEX	527